Heat is the culprit but light often gets the blame for deterioration of color and flavor in home-canned foods during storage.

Food canned at home may suffer more damage from oxidation than commercially processed food, not because of light coming through the glass, but because more air may be left in the jar.

The new method of canning fruits with added ascorbic acid (vitamin C) is a great protection against damage from oxidation because this substance absorbs oxygen in the jar and prevents it from acting on the fruit.
