MORE ABOUT Zoning

hearing. If and when the final zoning plans are adopted, the plan together with the map will be incorporated into a new town ordinance, and the zoning requirements then will become law.

The zoning provisions, he explained, would not be retroactive: "Waynesville isn't going to get a general overhauling."

But the town will make the most of what it has. The primary consideration of the zoning work is that of land use—that is, whether an industry would be permitted in a particular business district, a business house built in an industrial district or in a residential district.

Residences, of course, may be built anywhere. The zoning provisions also would cover front yards, side yards, and heights of buildings.

For instance, they would require that residences be a certain distance apart. The ordinance, of course, would not be retroactive. It would apply only to proposed new construction.

The law also would prevent a man from building a tall structure right beside a small house, and would outlaw "spite fences," though these are practically unknown in this area now.

Mr. Franklin pointed out that the general result also would be to prevent an increase in an individual property owner's fire insurance rates, for instance, as well as protect the value of his property.

In his 13 years of service with the North Carolina League, Mr. Franklin said, he's never seen the people of a town turn down a zoning proposal, or seen a town zoning ordinance lose a court test.

The Asheville native also works as a visiting professor at the University of North Carolina School of Law. He teaches the embryo attorneys the practical phases of city government.

In addition to Waynesville, Canton, Asheville, and Charlotte, he's helped set up zoning plans for Brevard, Hendersonville, Gastonia, Spindale, Rutherfordton, Marion, Hickory, Gastonia, Albemarle, and Shelby, among others.

Asheville, he said, was the last "big city" in North Carolina to set up a zoning ordinance, and the job took more than a year. In this case, he was working as a consultant. The city officials provided the "leg work".

Mr. Franklin has been in Waynesville less than four days. But it's doubtful that you could lose him anywhere in town if you took him out on the most obscure street at night and twirled him around three times blindfolded. In the course of his work, he's visited every street and alley Waynesville has, and knows the town already about as well as the oldest native.

N. C. Road Unit In Move To Cut Down Fatalities

With the July 4th holiday still three weeks away the State Department of Motor Vehicles made plans to try to cut down the highway death toll.

Motor Vehicles Commission Landon C. Rosser said Highway Patrolmen would begin distributing to motorists next week some 40,000 cards carrying a plea for safe driving on the Fourth.

Rosser said 13 persons were killed in North Carolina highways over the Fourth last year. He said all leave had been cancelled for highway patrolmen this year in an effort to lower the toll.

The warning cards carry a picture of a patrolman and the message: "I am your highway patrolman. I will be on the highways of North Carolina constantly during the Fourth of July week-end to protect you in your holiday travels. Thirteen persons were killed over the Fourth of July last year. You can help me cut down on that tragic toll if you drive safely and sanely this Fourth."

Livestock Meet Set For July 1

State Agriculture Commissioner L. Y. Ballentine and other agricultural leaders will appear here July 1 at a western district livestock meeting sponsored by the N. C. Farm Bureau.

This was announced today by Oral L. Yates of Iron Duff, president of the Haywood County Farm Bureau.

The meeting will open at 11 a.m. at the Court House in Waynesville.

This will be one of a series of the state farm organization is sponsoring for the promotion of the development of the livestock industry in North Carolina.

One of the features of the program will be a tour of Haywood County's livestock farms, including beef cattle and dairy.

Among the leading figures who will speak at the session, in addition to Mr. Ballentine, are Lon Edwards, of Hookerton, president of the State Farm Bureau; R. Flake Shaw of Greensboro, executive vice-president of the Bureau; and Dr. D. W. Colvard, head of the N. C. State College department of animal husbandry.

Mr. Yates said committees, comprising these members, would assist in the arrangements for the session:

Arrangements—Frank M. Davis, chairman; C. B. McCrary, and Jack McCracken;

Entertainment — T. C. Davis, chairman; Mrs. Henry Francis, and David Boyd;

Reception—Joe Palmer, chairman; Ed Justice, and K. O. Carswell.

Paint Procedure

When coating a room, the ceiling should be painted first—going across the short way of the room.

In painting walls, you start in an upper corner and work downward. Flat paints are applied with semi-circular strokes. Varnish and enamel are flowed on with ever strokes. Remember that rooms to be painted should be well lighted and well ventilated. Also that good brushes are as important as good paint and should be carefully handled and well cared for.
