Comments From Some Of Our Visitors

W. J. Elliott, of St. Petersburg, Fla., staying at Lambuth Inn, says: "Have traveled all over the U. S. and have twice crossed the 'Smokies', once in each direction, and have on two occasions spent several days at Lake Junaluska, each time at Lambuth Inn. I consider the 'Smokies' and Lake Junaluska region one of the most beautiful and inspiring in the entire nation."

Mrs. Bessie Cherry, Hickory, Va., staying at Sidnola, says: "The beauty and inspiration is beyond compare."

Mrs. Vera Lilly, Hopewell, Va., staying at Sidnola, says: "The beauty is indescribable."

J. I. Hickman, of Hudson, staying at Sidnola, says: "I like it fine, and am sorry to leave. I'm coming again soon."

M. A. Lee, of Chattanooga, Tenn., says: "A grand place to rest and enjoy yourself. Makes you want to come back for more and stay longer. Will recommend it to my friends at home."

Mrs. R. R. Shackelford, of Hickory, Va., staying at Sidnola, says: "The beauty and inspiration shall be a lasting memory."

Mrs. M. H. Stiffar, of Roanoke, Va., staying at Sidnola, says: "The scenery is inspiring, beautiful; the climate ideal; the people hospitable and friendly; a wonderful vacation!"

Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Brockman, of Chester, S. C., staying at Sidnola, says: "We have found Lake Junaluska and Waynesville ideal at all seasons. A trip up is always a real treat."

Mrs. B. L. Bryan, of Greensboro, Ga., staying at Sidnola, says: "I always enjoy my visit to Lake Junaluska and Waynesville. I think Western North Carolina is great!"

Mrs. R. R. Shackelford, of Hickory, Va., staying at Sidnola, says: "The beauty and inspiration shall be a lasting memory."

'Unto These Hills,' Drama Of Cherokee Tragedy

At upper left is a general view of the open-air Mountainside theater at Cherokee, where the symphonic drama, "Unto These Hills," opened its summer run July 1. The production tells the story of President Andrew Jackson driving the Cherokee Indians out of their beloved Smoky Mountains to new homes in Oklahoma. At upper right is a scene in the show where the Spanish explorer, Desoto, visits the Cherokee nation, Cain Saunooke (second from right), a member of the present-day Cherokee Council, plays the role of a Cherokee chief and tells Desoto to "go west for gold." Lower left: This scene shows the celebrated Indian warrior, Tecumseh, trying to rally the Cherokees in a war challenge against early American settlers. The old chief drives a tomahawk into a stump to show his bitterness for the settlers, but the Cherokees remain peaceful. Lower right: In a tragic scene of the drama, Tsali, a Cherokee, kills a white soldier for raping and murdering Tsali's wife (on ground at right). Tsali escaped into the Smokies but came back voluntarily and was executed before a firing squad in return for a promise from the white soldiers that all his people would be pardoned. (AP).

Cherokee Drama On List Of Nation's Top Shows

NEW YORK (UP) — The business of producing outdoor pageant-dramas dealing with phase of American history is growing. Besides the theater aspect, communities have found such attractions good bait for tourists.

The playwright Paul Green started it 14 years ago with his "The Lost Colony," which tells the story of Sir Walter Raleigh's tragic attempt to colonize Roanoke Island. It is being presented again this summer at the Waterside Theater, Manteo, Roanoke Island.

This will be the fourth season for Green's second such effort, "The Common Glory," a symphonic drama of the founding of the republic which he wrote for presentation at Lake Matoaka, Williamsburg, Va. It will open July 1 and continue through Sept. 16.

It will be the first summer for "Unto These Hills," a drama about the Cherokee Indians, which will be presented in a mountainside amphitheater at Cherokee, N. C., beginning July 1. It will close on Labor Day.

"Unto These Hills" was written by Kermit Hunter of Chapel Hill, N. C., with musical background by Jack Frederick Kilpatrick, who is of Cherokee ancestry. The production is sponsored by the Cherokee Historical Association, with expert technical supervision by the Carolina Playmakers of Chapel Hill.

Green, meanwhile, is working two more historical plays for future. One has to do with the grim Fathers for presentation at Plymouth, Mass., and the other about the early Spanish mission life in California. This one will be presented in an amphitheater at the Ojai Valley near Los Angeles.

Ethel Merman's leading lady, "Call Me Madam," the Irving Berlin-Russell Crouse-Howard musical about a female ambassador, will be Paul Lukas, who has been involved with the show since he last appeared on Broadway in 1940 in "Watch on the Rhine".

The show will open Sept. 10 in New Haven, Conn., and will come here in mid-October.

Robert Alda, who has had an uneven time of it since he played George Gershwin in the musical "Rhapsody in Blue" will get Broadway chance this fall. "Guys and Dolls," a musical comedy based on material of the Damon Runyon. Frank Loesser done the score and probably will find himself represented by Broadway shows at the same time since his "Where's Charley" shows no sign of departing.
