is a showboat for the picture of the same name. It's 105 feet long and extends 38 feet above the water but only 2 1/2 feet below. Floats in a backlot lake only 4 1/2 feet deep.

It cost $90,000 and takes 25 men to run it. Two of them operate an oil burner that produces clouds of black smoke issuing from the stacks. A boiler creates similarly phony jets of steam.

The craft's real power is two airplane engines in the hold that yank it about the lake on underwater cables. Fake, 40-foot trees had to be built on the bank — pine and acacia branches on telephone poles — to mask oil wells in the background.

Darn clever, these set-builders.
