Cornet's Blue Notes Removed By Science

FOOLPROOF HORN exhibited by Prof. Mark H. Hindsley.

AP Newsfeatures
CHAMPAIGN, Ill.—The clarinet and the cornet have undergone a tune-up job at the University of Illinois.

Prof. Mark H. Hindsley, director of University bands, recently redesigned the instruments with the aid of science. His improved cornet and clarinet were developed from research conducted with an electrical device called a chromatic stroboscope.

Little wheels in this device light up as various tones are sounded. If the tone is flat, spokes of the wheels appear to turn to the left. If they are sharp, the spokes turn to the right. But if the tones are at correct pitch, they stand still. Hindsley's new instruments cause the wheels to stand still, indicating they are perfectly tuned.

The clarinet's improvement involves a new tone-opening in the instrument. There is a re-arrangement of the key mechanism. The fingering of the keys is the same.

The cornet has been made more easy to tune. Two rings for left-hand operation have been added. One is for the thumb and one for a finger. The thumb ring varies the tuning slide to bring off-tones into line. The finger-operated ring works with a spring slide that changes the tones produced by the third valve.

Hindsley says skilled musicians have been able to correct tones in the past. But the improvements will make for easier and better playing.
