and can arrange the financing. For instance, the limitations on metal consumption do not generally apply to the thousands of items classified as "B" products under the Controlled Materials Plan - such products as builders hardware, metal window sash, metal lath, wire mesh, lighting fixtures, domestic furnaces, nuts and bolts, many types of nails, valves, steel or cast iron bathtubs, kitchen sinks, electrical conduit, etc. The 1800 pounds of steel and 35 pounds of copper allowed are over and above the unlimited "B" items used.

True, structural steel is made precious by the order but very little of this material is employed in the average North Carolina home - and that generally as a convenience rather than a necessity. Also, piping must be arranged efficiently if there are to be more than the normal number of bathrooms. Copper wiring cannot be wasted, but according to our calculations the 35 pounds allowable is sufficient for circuits which will serve up to 14 outlets plus the usual 3-wire lead-in. Aluminum as such is taboo, but millions of homes - good ones, too - have been built without it, notwithstanding that it is still available in hundreds of unrestricted Class "B" products as mentioned above. In fact, offhand we can't think of any place where aluminum is often used in residential construction except as a "B" product.

Franky, we don't know whether Washington deliberately misled the press to scare people into preventing home building from getting ahead of the earlier "official" estimates, or whether all the facts were just not known. But we do know that Mr. and Mrs. Tar Heel have been erroneously led to believe that they must put off their building plans because of Order M-4A, and such is not necessarily - not by a jug full - the case! Will you please look into this matter and help rectify a serious misunderstanding?

Yours very truly, H. B. Foster, Gen'l Mgr. Brick and Tile Service, Inc. Greensboro.
