Our Sense of Taste

It is believed that the tongue has specific sense organs which respond to different chemicals. According to the classical view there are four types of such taste receptors, each with their own nerve fibers, through which impulses are sent to the brain. One type is for sour, one for sweet, one for salt and one for bitter; our taste sensations being made up of various combinations of these fundamentals. The exact process by which a particle of matter stimulates the nerve endings is not known.

A grass or legume that can be made into hay will also make a good animal ration.
