Kinston, 1,000; Rockingham, 475; Waynesville, 700; and Wilmington, 800. The total capacity of the eight theaters is 7,150.

Mr. Stellings and Mr. Gossett will have temporary offices in the Manor Theater but will open permanent downtown offices at an early date. All of the indoor theaters are first-run houses and they plan to continue them as this type of operation.

Plan No Change

There are from 80 to 100 persons employed in the theaters and the new owners plan no change in personnel. John A. Drinkhouse is manager of the Strand here.

All of the leases they are taking over are for long terms and all of the theaters are well equipped and in excellent buildings, they said. All have facilities for 3-D projection and wide screens will be installed in the near future. The Kinston theater, they said, is considered the newest theater in the Carolinas, while the two drive-ins are only about a year old and are well equipped.

Mr. Stellings has been in the theater business for a number of years. Mr. Gossett was in the textile mill business with his father, the late B. B. Gossett, until the sale of the Gossett Mills to Texton in 1946. Since then, he has been operating a textile mill supply company. He has discontinued this business, effective Saturday, however, and both he and Mr. Stellings will devote their full time to the operation of the theaters.
