

LABOR DAY --- 1953

WE HONOR THE AMERICAN WORKER

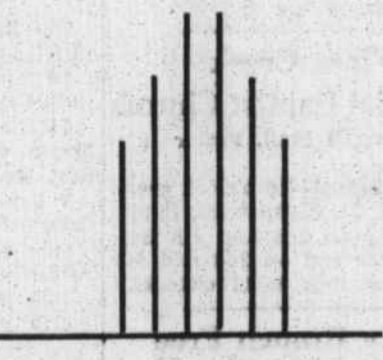

For many years, Labor Day has served to mark the end of summer. Yet originally, it was set aside by the majority of the States in the Union as a day of parades, festivities in the interest of labor and laboring men and women.

We pause to acknowledge the part which the working people play in every phase of American life today, and the valuable contribution they add in helping make this a better world in which to live.
