'Anteaters' In Washington Dine On Unusual Dishes

By JANE EADS

WASHINGTON-I don't have a long snout or bushy tail, but I can charge anything from an apple to a mink in local shops and enter most circles simply by identifying myself as an anteater.

Where other folks bring out driver's licenses, bank books and White House passes, I simply bring forth my membership card for the Anteaters Association and everything is jake. People don't even ask whether I eat ants.

There are several hundred twolegged Anteaters in the Capital. fessional people who belong to an association which indulges in large, rich wild game lunches once a week this season of the year. The organization, formed several years ago by Dr. William Mann, director of the National Zoological Gardens, has no officers, no bylaws, no politics, no dues. Members just gather round the 200 restaurant to

I had potted buffalo steak at the association's 80th game lunch. The buffalo, just arrived from the Oklahoma Wildlife Refuge, not from the Zoo as you might have thought, was prepared by the restaurant's gourmet-minded chef, who first grilled the meal, then put it in the oven in a covered casserole with the gravy. The meal began with blance to a mouse." buffalo broth with barley and also had baked potato, escalloped tomato, wild rice, currant jelly, a delicious green salad flavored with dill, and apple turnover.
