Puerto Rico's Industrial Program Told To Kiwanis

The booming industrial program on the island of Puerto Rico was discussed at a meeting of the Waynesville Kiwanis Club Tuesday night by a Puerto Rican government official, Martin Gaudier.

Gaudier, who is now in Waynesville observing operations at the Welco Shoe plant, was introduced by Walter Rollman, a Kiwanis member and Welco executive.

The speaker explained that Puerto Rico's industrialization started only 15 years ago, but has since attracted 350 new industries to the island in the Caribbean.

The entire weight of the government, he explained, is in back of Puerto Rico's industrialization and a special agency has been created to attract new plants to the island.

The speaker added further that he is connected with this new agency.

Mr. Gaudier said that Puerto Rico has been so successful in its efforts to attract industry because of (1) its tax-incentive law, (2) liberal assistance in the construction of new plant buildings, and (3) cheap labor.

He explained that new industries can operate free of taxes for 10 years. Business also can take advantage of the government's offer to construct plants in two sizes—11,500 square feet or 23,000 square feet.

Industries then either can buy the new buildings for 20 per cent down and the remainder in 20 years, or can rent the property at low rates, he said.

Rental charges range from 75 cents per square foot per year in San Juan, the island's capital, down to 45 cents in areas more remote from transportation, he remarked.

Mr. Gaudier said that Puerto Rico has no general minimum wage scale, but industries have established their own scales, e.g., 50 cents an hour in plastics plants and 75 cents an hour in cement plants.

Among major American industries which have established plants in Puerto Rico in recent years, the speaker pointed out, are Sylvania, Remington-Rand, General Electric, U. S. Carborundum Corp., Paper Mate, which has its largest plant on the island, employing 800, and Sunbeam, which operates a plant manufacturing electric shavers for women.

One major obstacle to the Puerto Rican industrialization program, Mr. Gaudier asserted, is the lack of skilled workers. However, he said, natives work well with their hands and learn rapidly.

To make up this lack of skilled help, most industries set up a training program in Puerto Rico before undertaking to go into production, the speaker explained.

Despite all the industrialization on the island, Mr. Gaudier commented, Puerto Rico is still basically an agricultural state, with sugar cane as its basic crop. Also produced in large quantities are rum, pineapple, and coffee.

Mr. Gaudier told the Kiwanians that Puerto Rico has been a part of the United States since the Spanish-American War in 1898, but has no representation in the U. S. Congress.

Spanish is the predominant language on the island, he said, but English is a required subject in all the schools, and virtually all the better-class of people now speak English.

The island has a circumference of approximately 300 miles, he explained, and is traversed mainly by automobile. There are few railway tracks on the island, he added.

In Puerto Rico, Mr. Gaudier pointed out, the government controls housing developments, transportation, power, and water.

In their slum-clearance housing projects, he said three-bedroom apartments are rented to the poorer classes for as low as $2.50 per month, but regular housing is even more expensive than in the U.S.

How To Plan Your Hairdo As If You Had Two Heads

ACT ONE . . . A simple style that is worn loosely combed down for the casual look in daytime.

ACT TWO . . . Here the hair is worn loosely combed down and up in a smooth brushed back and up in a smooth swirl for a sophisticated effect.

By VIVIAN BROWN

AP Newsfeatures Beauty Editor

EVERY GOOD WOMAN deserves two hair styles, says Lilly Dache, fashion and beauty authority.

As if women weren't having enough trouble caring for one head, Miss Dache suggests they pretend they have two. One head is for day and the other is for night, she says. No one hair style can be right for both.

Clothes are glamorous for evening wear, so the day hairdo will hardly flatter the elegant switch. She likes down style for day and up styles for night and says the basic requirement for night and day coiffures is hair that has grown a bit from the short lengths popular last year. It may be from two inches to a long page-boy effect, however about two inches above the shoulder line.

Miss Dache and her favorite hair stylist, Mr. Kenneth, have put their heads together and designed a number of classic styles for evening wear. The updo is soft, rather than severe, and has some face curls. It may be waved if it is long enough.

Daytime hairdos may be worn sleek, brushed straight and slightly turned under at the ends or set in soft waves and turned up. Dress-up hair ornaments may include velvet bows, jewels and flowers, suggests Miss Dache. She and Mr. Kenneth believe that for the best health and appearance of the hair it should be brushed often while lying across the chaise longue or bed with head dangling as you brush for at least five minutes every morning and night.

Miss Dache reminds us too that simplicity goes a long way in maintaining the double-feature hair style. It will be much easier to go from one to the other hairdo if hair is not worn in an elaborate style to begin with.
