

POPE RECEIVES HAMMARSKJOLD

UNITED NATIONS Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold, who is on a peace mission to the Middle East, poses with Pope Pius XII at Vatican City, Rome, after a 20-minute audience. The Pontiff expressed hope that the U.N. official would succeed in ending the dangerous tension between the Arab Nations and Israel. Hammarskjold was scheduled to set up peace mission headquarters in the offices of the U.N. Relief and Works Administration in Beirut.

Senator Scott Sees Need For More Young Scientists

By BILL WHITLEY
SCIENCE. A group of senators headed by Senator Thye of Minnesota last week started a movement to encourage the training of more scientists.
 Under a resolution introduced by the group, including Senator W. Kerr Scott, a special joint committee of Congress would make a far-reaching study of why the United States is lagging behind in training young scientists. The proposed committee would also co-operate with private industries and recommend ways the Federal government could help in producing more teachers and students of science.

BEHIND. "We are in good shape right now as far as actual working scientists are concerned," Senator Scott said, "but we are lagging far behind in turning out new scientists. In fact, our best information coming out of Russia today indicates that the United States is graduating only about one half as many scientists and engineers from colleges and universities as the Soviet Union. This means that dark days are ahead unless we take drastic steps immediately."

 It is becoming increasingly difficult, Scott said, to find teachers of mathematics, physics, chemistry and biology. At the same time, fewer and fewer students are taking their majors in these and related fields.
GRANTS. Scott said that in recent years the Federal government has increased its activities in the field of scientific research by boosting financial grants to individual scientists and colleges and universities.

 "It may be wise," he said, "to explore the possibilities of doing something similar for students and teachers of the basic sciences. But the ways and means are not nearly as important as positive action."
QUOTES. The November 14, 1952 issue of U. S. News and World Report makes some interesting reading for those who are inclined to think about what has been happening in the past four years.
 The issue of the magazine in question was published in a matter of days after President Eisenhower had been elected by a whopping vote.

 In part, it said:
 "Inflation is ending. Dollars gradually will be harder to come by. Deflation, of a moderate kind, will be accepted, not resisted.
 "Pay, at present rates, will seem better as cost of living declines.
 "Farm work will be more attractive in another year."

REVERED Moments

Approaching motherhood brings to the expectant mother many changes both physically and mentally. At this time a "Mother to Be" will find her family medical doctor a really close friend and adviser. Too much stress cannot be put on the importance of prenatal care as the future of both mother and child will depend largely upon the strict adherence to a scientifically planned schedule of living.
