Mother Is a Glamor Girl

By DOROTHY ROE Associated Press Women's Editor

"EVERYONE either is a mother or has a mother," says Karl Rosen, a dynamic young man whose firm turns out close to four million dresses a year for modern mothers who like to look young.

As a move toward smartening up fashions for the mature figure, Rosen hired one of the world's most glamorous grandmothers, Gloria Swanson, to design clothes that she herself would wear and to present them in fashion shows around the country several times a year. The combination has been a decided success. Gloria meets and greets thousands of women every year in towns across the nation, gives them her own ideas of fashion, and comes back singing the praises of the average American woman, who does not allow herself to grow old. As Gloria puts it:

"Fashion is not an age problem but a size problem."

To illustrate her point, she has shown an identical fashion in four sizes — for a little girl, a junior miss, a mother and a grandmother — providing a sure-fire climax for a fashion show.

When Gloria is in Europe, as happens frequently she sends back reports on the new trends in French and Italian fashions, many of which are incorporated in American styles.

Rosen also enlists many of the famous couturiers of London, Paris and Rome to design fashions especially for his line. Among these have been such top designers as Jacques Fath, Desses, de Givenchy, Rodriguez and Norman Hartnell.

The era of "old lady" clothes is past, says Rosen, and every woman has a right to look young in well-fitting, youthfully styled fashions.
