

Senators Study Plans For Re-Opening Tobacco Probe

By BILL WHITLEY

TOBACCO. A Senate subcommittee will re-open hearings in the near future concerning the use of synthetic tobacco in cigars and cigarettes.

The subcommittee, made up of Senators Clements of Kentucky, Scott of North Carolina and Schoepel of Kansas, has had difficulty in obtaining certain information that is essential to the investigation.

In most cases, manufacturers are reluctant, naturally, to talk in any detail about processes they are using or experimenting with that are designed to make use of tobacco stems, low grade tobaccos, or any foreign matter.

DRASTIC. By using new processes, manufacturers are able to utilize stems and other material that in the past has been considered waste.

As a result, they are able to get many more cigarettes out of a given amount of tobacco than in the past.

If these techniques and processes are continued, it could easily mean that the entire tobacco industry would have to undergo drastic, deep-rooted changes.

For farmers themselves, it would mean large acreage reductions, which cannot be taken at this time without serious hardship.

QUESTION. The question the subcommittee wants to answer is how the over-all problem should be approached and solved.

Present thinking leans toward legislation that would make it difficult for manufacturers to use anything but natural leaf tobacco in their cigarettes and cigars.

TEXTILES. Recently Harry Riemer, editor of the Daily News Record, the leading trade journal of the textile industry, made a speech in Mississippi that was an eye-opener for all those interested in the present problems facing the textile industry as a result of increased foreign competition.

Leaders in the United States textile industry have been deeply concerned for the past year about the importation of great quantities of cheap textiles from Japan and other foreign countries.

Efforts to get the Eisenhower administration to set up import quotas on textiles have been fruitless. Meanwhile, more and more foreign made yarns and fabrics are coming into this country.

Riemer, just back from a world tour, said today's competition from foreign countries is just a drop in the bucket compared to what it will be only a few years from now.

Furthermore, he said, American textile manufacturers are partly responsible for the increased imports. Many U. S. textile plants, he said, are buying unfinished goods from Japan cheaper than they can produce them in this country. They are finished in American mills and sold in the domestic market.

It means a few more dollars in profits now, he said, but in the long run, Americans are helping to build up Japan's industry, which is

Glenn Draper To Lead Music At Lake Junaluska

Glenn Draper, assistant to the Dean of Music at Southern Methodist University, Dallas, Texas, will be the director of music at Lake Junaluska this summer. He will lead congregational singing and various youth groups who will participate in the programs.

Draper succeeds professor Cyrus Daniels of Vanderbilt who has served the assembly for the past eight years. He is a native of Roanoke, Va., and graduated from Indiana University with a BS degree in music.

While a member of the United States Air Force, Draper organized a 140-voice mixed chorus, a 45 piece orchestra, and a male chorus. These groups have performed for two years over NBC and CBS radio networks. The 40-member male chorus has appeared as soloists with Ed Sullivan, Vaughn Monroe, and Mimi Benzell under the direction of Draper.

Draper brings to Junaluska a group of singers who will probably serve as the leaders in each section of a large volunteer choir to be formed here this summer.

TO WASH WOOL BLANKETS.

Wool blankets wash like a dream! And your dreams will seem sweeter when you're tucked under soft blankets freshly laundered in your automatic washer.

Set the water temperature control at warm and allow washer to fill. Put in detergent and let washer run until the detergent is thoroughly dissolved. Now turn the washer off and put the blanket in for a nice, leisurely 15-minute soak. Turn the blanket over a few times by hand if you wish! Never turn the machine on to agitate the blanket. That's the way to cause shrinkage.

After the 15-minute soak, turn the washer to "spin" until all dirty water has been drained out. Then fill your washer with warm rinse water. Stop the washer immediately and let the blanket soak in the rinse water for 4 to 5 minutes. Turn the dial to "spin" to remove the rinse water. Now rinse the blanket a second time in the same way. Acilan, Dynel and Orlon blankets may be washed by following the same instructions as for wool blankets.

If you own an automatic dryer: Preheat the dryer at "high" for about 5 minutes. Then, into the dryer put the blanket and six or seven large bath towels. The bath towels will buffer the tumbling action and keep the folds of the wet blanket from rubbing together. Leave the blanket in the dryer for 15 to 20 minutes for a regular weight blanket. A few minutes longer may be needed if blanket is heavier.

Remove the blanket from the dryer while it still contains some moisture. Then stretch the blanket and allow it to finish drying in the air. If possible, place over one or two clotheslines. Brush well and press the bindings with a warm iron.

If you don't own an automatic dryer: Dry your blanket by placing it across a clothesline, or preferably two lines, with weight equally divided. When blanket is dry, brush well to raise nap. Dampen the bindings and press with a warm iron.

Most manufacturers of electric blankets recommend washing. Check their labels for washability. Follow the same method of laundering as for wool blankets. Be careful in washing not to twist the blanket—for the tiny wires running throughout can be damaged.

Be sure to line dry. Do not dry an electric blanket in an automatic dryer unless the manufacturer of the blanket recommends dryer drying.

Gold leaf and leaf of other precious metals have been made since ancient times, but only recently has it been possible to produce palladium leaf for decorative purposes.
