Origin Of Seven Haywood Place Names Is Explained

By W. C. MEDFORD

NOTE: In this series of two articles the origin of Haywood place names will be given.

Some time after the Revolution (in the early 1790's probably) the white settlers on the Holston under Col. John Sevier made raids on the Cherokee Indians beyond the Balsams. The route of travel was up through (now) Madison County into Buncombe and through this county via Balsam Gap.

In one raid Ramsey says that Sevier had 120 men. "He entered and took by surprise the town of Tuckasee. Fifty warriors were slain and as many women and children taken prisoner. The troops under Sevier burnt 15 or 20 towns and all the graneries of corn they could find." This was because the Indians were in the habit of making sallies down the Pigeon into Tennessee, striking at the whites, then hurrying back into their mountain fastnesses.

Fines Creek

So it was that Captain Peter Fine, with his company of militia, followed the Indians after one of these raids. He overtook and routed them, recovering the stolen horses. It is said, Now, Fine, on his return down the Pigeon, camped for the night near a creek known then as Twelve Mile Creek. Fine's troops had, in turn, been followed by a party of Cherokee warriors. In a surprise attack they fell upon the whites early next morning, killing Vinet Fine, brother of the commander. It was bitter cold, the ground being hard frozen and the creek also being frozen over. So in their haste, Fine's men broke the ice and let the body of their comrade down into the shallow stream, thinking that, in this way, it would not be found or molested until they could return. But on their return, the body could not be found.

Not long after that, the creek was being called Fines Creek; and when the precinct was formed in the first decade of the 19th century, the community was officially given this name.

Lake Junaluska

Junaluska is an Indian name. It was given to the range of Balsams just west of Waynesville in honor of Chief Junaluska who commanded the Cherokees in Jackson's army, war of 1812. He was a man honored by his people and respected by the whites. Colonel Thomas put the utmost confidence and trust in Junaluska. He was buried (1847) near the village of

Seven Inductees Leaving Today

The Selective Service Board announced that the following registrants were sent to Charlotte today for induction: Virgil Monroe Mathews, Crabtree; Mack William Noland, Rt. 3, Waynesville; Roy Richard Brownling, Rt. 3, Canton; Arvil Raymond Balding, Rt. 3, Waynesville; Robert Gene Parks, Rt. 4, Waynesville; Stanley William Swayngin, Rt. 3, Waynesville; Grover Lee Bradshaw, Rt. 4, Waynesville.

Another six registrants were sent for armed forces physical examination.

Robbinsville in Graham County. Hence Lake Junaluska and Junaluska post office.

Iron Duff

This was intended to be Aaron McDuff—for the first permanent settler in the community. (A very bad mistake you will say)

It is said that it happened when Uncle Frank Davis, way back about 1880 or '81, sent in the name for the post office to the department at Washington. He might have sent in the name as Aron Duff. Anyway, the name was somehow misread or misprinted and came back "Iron Duff". No attempt has ever been made, that we know of, to have it changed.

Allens Creek

This was after William Allen, one of the early settlers in this section. He lived at the present R. O. Allen place.

Plott Creek

For Henry Plott, the first to settle on the creek. He lived where John Plott lives.

Ratcliff Cove and Francis Cove

Abraham Ratcliff was one of the first settlers in this section—hence Ratcliff Cove. Likewise the Francis Cove was so named for William Francis, one of our pioneers.

Jonathan's Creek

This creek and township was named for Jonathan McPeters, who was one of the earliest pioneers of this county. He settled right about where what today is known as the Robert Plott place.

White Oak

Much fine white oak timber once grew in this section. So, when the township was erected from Fines Creek and Jonathan's Creek, it was named White Oak.

PARENT PROBLEMS

Start Early To Develop Child's Musical Talent

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D.

IT'S wonderful when an entire family listens to good music together. It's wonderful, too, when several or all of them play instruments or sing together at home. In some homes, when a new song is introduced, the whole family sings it around the dinner table at the end of a meal or around the fireside. There are a few homes in which neighbor youths and parents gather to make music just for fun.

Interest in Music

Stimulation of interest in music can't begin too early. Some mothers sing lullabies to the baby or sing softly while dressing or bathing him. A few fathers do, too. Some parents sing or whistle as they do things about the house. What a great achievement it is when a child first discovers he can whistle a tune.

I once heard a 3-year-old going about the house singing melodies he had picked up from TV. His voice was lovely and he carried a tune well. He was encouraged in this by the oft-expressed appreciation of his parents.

Few young children, however, hear much good music on TV. They are more sure to hear it if good music records are provided for them and if they can play the records for themselves on a phonograph. I know some parents who have a phonograph set near the bedrooms, so the children may set them playing at bedtime, falling off to sleep to the strains of beautiful melodies.

Some families sing grace at meals and even the tot three or four may join in. Children a bit older may like to sing hymns at home with the family. Some parents, who observe special religious holidays, sing songs and hymns related to the occasion with their children. If there's no piano and if neither parent can lead off well, records of these songs or hymns may be available.

Musical Enjoyment

It's when early interest and talent develop in one or several children and they acquire skill at playing musical instruments, that the whole family can have the best music enjoyment. Unfortunately, learning such skills may take years of hard work which only interested parents may be able to cultivate in their children.

Fortunately, the modern school, kindergarten up, often exposes children to good music early.

Two Break - Ins Are Reported; Six Tires Taken

Two break-ins Tuesday night have been reported by the sheriff's office and Hazelwood police. Six new tires valued at $150, were taken from the Haywood Esso Distributor, Inc. warehouse on the Asheville Road by thieves who broke in through a front door by sawing off the bolt.

Haywood Esso owners said their place also was broken into about a year ago when two tires were taken after intruders forced a lock on a back door.

Roy Stephens, Hazelwood police chief, said that thieves sawed off a bolt to gain entrance into a warehouse building at Hazelwood used jointly by the Atlanta-Asheville Trucking Co. and the Cline-Bradley Hardware.

Chief Stephens reported, however, that nothing has been found missing so far.
