Coloradoans Impressed By WNC Foliage, Hospitality

The greenness of the Carolina mountains, Southern hospitality, and farming on steep hillside slopes are among the most vivid impressions gained by a group of Colorado 4-H Club members during their stay in Haywood County last week.

According to the schedule first announced, the visitors were slated to leave here Sunday morning, but the schedule was revised later to permit them to spend Sunday here.

Yesterday morning, the Colorado group and their Haywood hosts attended a devotional service at the cross at Lake Junaluska to hear a brief message by the Rev. John I. Kizer, pastor of the Hazelwood Baptist Church.

Later in the morning, the Coloradoans went to regular church services with their hosts and then swimming at Camp Schaub in the afternoon. Last night—their last in Haywood County — time was left free for the 4-H'ers.

The group of 42 — including six adult leaders and the bus driver arrived in this county last Monday at 1 p.m. and left this morning at 6 o'clock.

During their stay here the Coloradoans toured Haywood County to see outstanding farms and 4-H projects, visited Cherokee, Mile-High Overlook, the Wagon Road-Beech Gap link of the Parkway, the Champion Paper and Fibre plant at Canton, the Biltmore

Woman Pastor Optimistic Over Newly Opened Field

"Women Methodist pastors want to work on the base basis as men, and do not want any petticoat privileges," Mrs. E. U. Robinson, pastor of the Fountain Head Methodist church, Gallatin, Tenn., told Rotarians here Friday.

Mrs. Robinson discussed the action of the recent jurisdictional conference in granting full clergy rights to women, after some 2,200 requests had been presented to the conference.

"The action was taken by men," she said, "as of the 765 delegates to the conference, only 81 were women. Even one woman spoke against the proposal by concluding, '... it might mean we would have a woman as a bishop.'"

Some 300 women held pastorates under some restrictions, prior to the action of the general board, the speaker said. Since the action of the conference on May 4, only seven have asked for membership in the general conference.

"I do not feel there will be an on-rush for membership; just an occasional application," she continued. "There are now 400 deaconesses."

The women must meet the same academic standards as men; a college degree and 3 years of seminary work. Most of the women are likely to be assigned to small churches, Mrs. Robinson predicted.

She told of her experience as a pastor of a small church, with a gai of 16 members in two years, with over half of them men.

"Men accept a woman pastor as a person, and not someone in competition to men. Women must go on the full basis as men, and not have petticoat privileges."

"The administration of women must be on a par with the administration of men," Mrs. Robinson went on, as she pointed out, "women can find their place in the
