Two new offices have been built adjoining the main auditorium lobby especially for conference personnel. Arrangements have been made by the Central Methodist Church in Asheville and Dr. Embree H. Blackard pastor, for transportation for delegates arriving in Asheville by train or plane. Buses will operate on the assembly grounds throughout the five-day conference

LEADERS OF THE 54-MEMBER COUNCIL of the Methodist Church's Southeastern Jurisdiction, which meets Tuesday at Lake Junaluska, are Bishop Arthur J. Moore, Atlanta, Ga., chairman; Dr. James W. Sells and Dr. George E. Clary, Sr., executive secretaries at the Atlanta headquarters.

An administrative body, the council is meeting preliminary to the nine-state Jurisdictional Conference's quadrennial session, Wednesday through Sunday. Dr. Clary is also summer program director at Lake Junaluska.

Widespread Press Coverage Is Expected At Conference

The Methodist Church's Southeastern Jurisdictional Conference this week at Lake Junaluska is expected to be productive of good "news copy" for the secular and church press throughout the South and elsewhere. The country's chief news services, the Associated Press and the United Press, will staff the meeting in order to cover for daily newspapers.

M. Hearn, director of Methodist public relations in the Louisville, Ky., episcopal area; Miss Phyllis Stough, Atlanta, director of Georgia Methodist Information, and Clifford Metcalf, University of North Carolina journalism student and a member of the assembly's news bureau.

Dr. Ralph Stookey, New York, general secretary and director of Methodist Information, will be on hand for the latter part of the meeting. Two other Methodist jurisdictional conferences—the Western and the North Central—are also being held this week, and Dr. Stookey will come here after attending their opening sessions.

Another news feature of the conference will be the publication of a Daily Christian Advocate to report the day-to-day action of the church body. The Daily Advocate is to the Methodist conference what the Congressional Record is to the U. S. Congress—the official report of flood took all my fence, including some brand new woven wire." Senator Medford said the folk of the flood area needed assistance and he would do his part in seeing that if any funds were available they would get it.

The senator said he wondered if the highway department would be justified in fixing the creek channel in order to preserve the nearby road, which suffered extensively during the flood.

Paul Dupre, highway engineer, told of their plan of work along the creek, and building a new link of the channel in certain spots.

The engineer said the flood had piled the rocks high, and tight, which would make the straightening and widening project more expensive.

Jonathan Woody pointed to the immediate need of the people in the area, and that two projects—giving assistance and working the creek bed should begin immediately.

Marion Messer, one of the Cove Creek group, said the land would be given for a new and straight channel, and then it was that every farmer present voted on the recommendation.

to carry delegates to and from the various meetings. This service is expected to decrease the number of private cars that might be operated on the grounds during the conference.

O. B. Fanning, associate director of the Commission on Public Relations and Methodist Information, has arranged for a press room in the old office building for representatives of various press services and newspapers.

Arrangements have also been made for a press desk just below the stage in the auditorium enabling reporters and public relations officials to give on-the-spot coverage of the conference.

Numerous ushers and pages will be on hand to run errands and perform minor tasks for the delegates. Tellers will be provided to count votes in the election of two bishops.

Various churches in the Asheville, Waynesville, and Marion districts have requested that visiting delegates be guest speaker in their individual churches at a service on Sunday, July 15. The Rev. Frank C. Smathers, superintendent of the Waynesville district is in charge of supplying the speakers.

of commissioners, felt the appeal for funds for the project should be made directly to the governor. A. W. Ferguson, manager of the Haywood ASC office said the farmers could get, he felt, assistance to reseed their sod crops, and also some damage assistance to help reseed soil improvement crops.

Virgil Holloway, county agent, presided at the meeting. As the meeting adjourned, Beck was asked to make the map of the affected area, and Dave Boyd, county chairman of the soil conservation program, gave formal approval for the project to start at once.
