What Is INSULIN?
Insulin is a substance produced in the body by the pancreas. Insulin helps turn the sugar a person eats into heat and energy. Failure on the part of the body to make enough insulin is one of the many causes of diabetes. When that is the case, the diabetic must obtain additional supplies of insulin by injection in the amounts and frequency specified by the doctor. An important part of our health service is to maintain fresh supplies of insulin which we keep under refrigeration at the correct temperature to assure full effectiveness. We are always prepared to serve fully the diabetic's specific needs.
