

84th Congress Set High Record In Passing Bills

WASHINGTON—From the number of bills passed, the 84th Congress set a record.

BUSY TWO YEARS

There were 2878 bills enacted by the 84th Congress in a busy two years. These measures were sent to the White House for approval or veto. Congress was in session for a total of 224 days to grind out this legislation.

The record of Congress is always a necessary part of the political hustings. This year promises to be no different.

For the next two or three weeks I want to discuss briefly parts of this record.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

As I am a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, I want to begin the discussion with this aspect of the record. There was the extended investigation of the air power of our country, carried on by the Symington Subcommittee of which I was a member. This resulted in focusing attention on the lagging development of air power. Subsequently the Congress increased appropriations for air power by nearly a billion dollars.

Congress was alert to the need for adequate defense. It provided more funds than the Administration requested. On this score it is very difficult to determine exactly what constitutes adequate national defense. My theory is that it is better to have a little more defense than to not have enough. This point of view is substantiated by testimony from experts who say that our forces must be in being as nuclear warfare will not permit time for a gradual build-up. Here is one of the knotty problems of our time.

APPROPRIATIONS

Congress cut President Eisenhower's requests for money by about $2 billion. Breaking down the appropriations by sessions, the first session's figure was $52.2 billion, and the second session's amount was $59.8. Of this amount, $66.5 billion was for national defense. The $59.8 billion this session does not include the new highway program, a long-range program designed to meet the present and growing demands by our country. A fertile field awaits a legislator who is dedicated to economy in government. With this thought in mind I voted against a number of programs designed to obligate the government to increased spending.

As I stated last week, considering all features of the 84th Congress, I am of the opinion that it made a good record.
