

Meeting Set Here Today On Poultry

N. C. State College specialists, the county agent's staff, and county poultry producers were scheduled to meet at 2 p.m. today at the courthouse to discuss plans for a long-range poultry program for Haywood County.

Plans for discussion are to substantially increase the county's income from three types of poultry enterprises — commercial eggs, hatching eggs, and broilers.

Representing N. C. State College at the meeting will be C. F. Parrish, head of the poultry extension department at the college, and W. C. Wells, poultry specialist. In addition to discussing the county's program, the specialists will also speak on the poultry outlook for 1957 and the long-range outlook.

Heading the county's poultry producers will be a special committee made up of Tom Brummitt of Pines Creek, chairman; Harvey D. Herbert Singletary, Ned Turner, and Roger Ammons.

Capital Life Continuous Style Show

By JANE EADS

WASHINGTON—Life is a continuous fashion show for women living in the capital. They see the colorful native costumes of far-away lands on the street, and at the super markets; the chic, cosmopolitan creations from Paris, Rome, and Athens at parties, concerts and the theater. No luncheon, tea or charity event is worth its calories or contributions without a style parade of some kind.

Washington women know that a sarong is something far more practical than a Hollywood prop; that a kimono in Japan is something to be worn on the most formal holiday occasions.

They know that even the most cultured of ladies wear trousers in public in some places and that Dior is not just a name in the headlines.

Mrs. Herve Alphonse, wife of the new French ambassador, is showing that the controversial French designer's clothes are actually wearable, even flattering. The complete wardrobe she brought with her reflects the Dior genius from gowns, suits and coats to hats, shoes and other accessories.

Most interesting and educational fashion-showing of recent weeks was the parade of costumes from nine Southeast Asian countries by diplomatic wives, daughters and secretaries for the benefit of the International Red Cross. Most of the costumes which were shown are frequently seen on women around Washington, for they are the regular every-day dress of their wearers in their own countries. The sari, for instance, is worn by ladies in India, Pakistan and Ceylon. A six-yard length of bright silk, usually hand-woven and often threaded with gold, is draped differently in each country, but always gracefully.

In Ceylon it is worn over a fitted sleeveless sheath with one end tightly wrapped around the hips and its top tucked into a tight narrow belt. On the other side more of the material is pulled into 11 two-inch pleats and tucked also into the band to form the skirt. The rest is thrown over the shoulder—"no sewing, no pins, and you can let the pleats out if you eat too big a dinner," explained one embassy wife.

Also shown was an exquisite Burmese wedding, or ceremonial dress, modeled by Theingi Hla, 16, daughter of the Burmese counselor. It had a lacy pink bodice, or "yincee," worn under an embroidered sheer white silk, hip-length jacket.

Miss Hla said the intricately patterned hand-woven skirt, or "htamein," drawn close around the hips, flaring out below the knees, sometimes take skilled weavers a year to make.

In Sierra Leone, a British protectorate in West Africa, the young natives prefer to become office clerks in the towns rather than go back into the interior to become tribal chiefs.
