PARENT PROBLEMS

Too Many Presents!

By GARRY CLEVELAND MYERS, Ph.D. "WHAT did you bring me?" It's a question many a child asks when his mother returns from shopping. It may be asked regularly by the younger child when the working-mother returns at night or by any child when a father, who's been away on a business trip, arrives home. When this becomes a regular question, it usually indicates serious problems.

Parents Tempted The working mother and the much-away-from-home father are especially tempted to arouse the expectation of a present. They hope that material gifts will compensate for their absence. It often does make the parent feel better temporarily.

An occasional gift—a book, useful plaything or tool which the child can enjoy profitably over an extended period—can prove wholesome. When, however, it emphasizes in the child's and parent's mind material things, it tends to decrease in their minds those precious items which money cannot buy.

The week-end father who brings lavish gifts to his child seems to buy the child's affection. He puts the mother at a disadvantage, especially when he also pampers this child and leaves him harder to manage. It's not only the amount of time a parent spends at home with his child that counts. It's also the parent-child relationship during this time that matters. It is this relationship which prepares the child to carry on happily and be self-reliant during the parent's next absence.

What the child, no matter his age, needs most from a working mother or a father who's away from home often is happy companionship. Also, during the limited time the parent is with his child, he or she should aim not only at temporary amusement of the child but also at enjoyments which will tend to carry on when he is absent.

A few examples of this include happy times together at the family meal, making and doing things together for fun indoors and outdoors, providing ways for the child to have enjoyment with other children.

(My bulletins, "The Working Mother" and "The Very Busy Child," may be had by sending a self-addressed U. S. stamped envelope to me in care of this news-He puts the mother at a disadvantage, especially when he also pampers this child and leaves him harder to manage. It's not only the amount of time a parent spends at home with his child that counts. It's also the parent-child relationship during this time that matters. It is this relationship which prepares the child to carry on happily and be self-reliant during the parent's next absence.

Persons who have clothing to donate to the drive Monday night are asked to call Mrs. Grady Boyd, GL 6-5339, to have the clothing picked up by Key Club members.

At present, clothing is received at the Clothing Closet in the basement of the courthouse each Monday from 1 until 3 p.m. under the chairmanship of Miss Nan Killian, and is distributed from 1 until 3 p.m. each Tuesday under the chairmanship of Mrs. Johnnie Kellett.

At other times, clothing may be left at the sheriff's office, or at the Waynesville fire department. Clothing Closet officials today expressed the hope that with the aid of teachers, ministers, and the truant officer, we hope to serve a real need in a wise manner.

Mrs. Mary Joe Prebeck entertained her son, Steve, and daughter, Mary Frances, with a birthday party last week. Christmas decorations were used throughout the house. The guests were Kathy and Debby Boyd, Ricky Boyd, Charles Boyd, Jimmie Howell, Martha and Mary Reeves, of Lake Junaluska, Carey and Harden Howell of Waynesville, Francis Boyd, Gladys Jones, Virginia and Rufus Reeves, and James Leatherwood.
