Guatemala's First Lady Helped To Dislodge Reds

By MARGARET KERNODLE

WASHINGTON—The First Lady of Guatemala is proud of her huge kitchen, equipped with the most modern mechanical devices manufactured in the United States.

This vivacious brunette, Alicia Odilia Paloma Paiz de Castillo Armas, who made an official visit here with her husband must be up by seven and rarely retires before midnight. She and President Carlos Castillo gave or attended a dinner party almost every night.

The huge home, the Casa Presidencial, is built around a beautiful indoor courtyard with fountains and tropical plants. She and her husband occupy the first floor, which includes a vast mirror room for state occasions and ten private apartments with modern furnishings and Chinese or Mayan accessories. It is here that she carries on a large correspondence, reads all the daily newspapers and weekly periodicals of her country.

She must find time for teas too. This regal looking first lady taught school four years until she was married in 1943. "I have not worked since," she said with her engaging smile.

However, like many wives in this country who ended careers with marriage, she's been at work constantly for her husband: kept a boarding house and a grocery store as anti-communist fronts, was his confidential secretary, a code expert and top assistant to him even before she became No. 1 hostess in Guatemala City.

Her most exciting experience was running a grocery store. Many items on the shelves, she recalled, represented code words by which she and her customers exchanged information. The boarding house was headquarters in Honduras for young men joining the forces protesting the Communist infiltration of Guatemala. There the quick-smiling Dona Adilla handled correspondence, decoded messages and sent clippings from Guatemala papers throughout Central America.

"We wanted to be sure they were informed through the words of Guatemala's own press of what the Communists were doing," she explained.

When Castillo Armas moved across the border with bombing planes, she followed in a week. She insists on personally reading all correspondence that comes to her desk and seeing those who seek her aid. She has little time for herself although she loves poetry and likes to listen to tango music. She sometimes plays pingpong with the President, who always wins, and goes target shooting with him.
