GOLDEN GLEAMS

A little learning is a dangerous thing; Drink deep, or taste not the Blerian spring; The shallow draughts intoxicate the brain, and drinking largely sobers us again.—Pope.

You wouldn't be able to recognize the optimistic salesman who tried to sell you if you heard his pessimistic grunts at home.

Times are undoubtedly improving—it's been at least a month since we read a joke about short skirts making a man look longer.

Next Sunday drop a twenty dollar bill in the collection and if the collector doesn't faint it's a sure sign that he is an income tax collector.

As one journeys through this vale of human activity he is surprised at the courtesy of some examples of the human race and at the rudeness of others.

The reason the average husband is so conceited is that he thinks he scored a triumph when he prevailed on his bride to accept his offer to support her for life.

LAY ON—AND BE DAMNED

Hello Bonus boys! Now is your time to stand pat. The House of Representatives in Congress has clothed itself in glory by passing the Patman Bill. Tell our two U. S. Senators, Mr. Bailey and Mr. Reynolds that if they do not stand pat for said bill and serve the soldier boys and the country instead of the Wall Street money gamblers that when their present terms expire they had as well bid their seats in the Senate an everlasting farewell. Boys, sweethearts and friends are going to stand behind you and their motto will be "Lay on McDuffy and damned be he who first cries 'hold! Enough!'" The country is in the condition it is because of the scarcity of money and it being cornered by our robber banking system.—R. G. Maxwell.
