

N. C. Should Adopt New York's System Of Law Enforcement Says Writer

Foughkeepsie, N. Y. August 12th, 1935. Editor, Duplin Times: New York was one of the states to ratify the 18th amendment to the Federal constitution. As I remember it only Connecticut and Rhode Island refused to ratify. New Jersey ratified late in 1922, two years after the amendment became operative.

The repeal of the 18th amendment by the passage of the 21st amendment leaves each state to handle the liquor question in its own way. New York has at Albany the capital a Liquor Control Board. The Board exercises strong authority all over the state.

The various towns, cities, and villages have "Liquor Stores". In these stores liquor may be bought in sealed packages on; not to be drunk on the premises. I rarely see any one entering or leaving these stores, although they do a thriving business, I am told.

In other places both beer and hard liquor may be bought to be drunk on the spot. We do not see the word "saloon" or "bar-room", however. We see "U. S. Grill", "Jones' Cafe". One place is called "Paradise Grill", although "Hell's Kitchen" might be a more appropriate name. No one is allowed to sell liquor for consumption at the place of sale except in connection with an eating place. It must be an eating place in reality too as well as in name. If a government agent calls for a meal in such a place and there is nothing to eat on hand it is too bad for the proprietor.

I started out, Mr. Editor to state a few facts that I think may be of interest to your readers. I do not mean to advocate measures, defend practices, or uphold theories. One thing, however, in conclusion. If a person comes out in public drunk here, be that person male or female, rich or poor, a town policeman or a state trooper is ready to arrest that drunken person. A few days ago in the city of Foughkeepsie a prominent lawyer was driving under the influence of liquor. He was arrested, fined a hundred dollars, his license was taken from him.

Every state ought to deal severely with drunken drivers, whether the drivers have been drinking licensed or unlicensed liquor. Our state of North Carolina has many reasons to be proud, but law enforcement is not one of them.

Truly yours,
JOHN T. FITZGERALD.

We'll Work Till Temperance Comes

(To the tune of "We'll Work Till JEUS Comes")

1 We're living in a wondrous land, Though danger lurks along; So we must join with heart and hand, And stand against this wrong.

2 We'll work till temp'rance comes, We'll work till temp'rance comes, We'll work till temp'rance comes, That we may save our homes.

3 The liquor forces in our land Will loudly blow their horn, To make the people take a stand, And vote for barley corn.

4 For strength and help we look to Him, Who lives and reigns above; To save our boys and girls from sin, And keep the onces we love.

5 We're threatened with an awful curse; God help us now, we pray; May we not have conditions worse, But wipe the curse away.

6 We thank our God for Christians all, We'll hear their voices ring; They'll hearken to the temp'rance call, and work for Christ our King.

7 We're millions strong and love our cause, Hallelujah, to His Name; We'll fight against the liquor laws Till victory we'll gain.

8 On Judgment day we'll hear Him say, "Well Done, thou faithful one, You stood with me from day to day, Come now into thy home."

Mrs. Summerlin Gives Birthday Dinner

A dinner was given by Mrs. Tilden Summerlin Sunday, August 10, 1935, honoring her little daughter, Polly's ninth birthday. She served an old time country dinner, picnic style. A large birthday cake with nine pink candles was the center of interest. In the afternoon, before the crowd left, she served the birthday cake with ice cream. In the afternoon, Polly entertained her little friends by taking them to Sunday School. Those present numbered about twenty-five and all enjoyed the day very much.

WHO DOES BUSINESS WITH A BANK?

The butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker? Yes, and their wives and their sons and their daughters. "And so do their sisters and their cousins and their aunts."

That's why this bank, knowing how many types of people and businesses it serves, is different. It isn't like the dentist's business, or the garageman's or the grocer's or the housewife's. Yet it is like them, something of each of them being a part of this bank's make-up.

Put them all together—the dentist's ethics, the garageman's ideals of service, the grocer's pride in his stock, the housewife's sense of values—and add to that a strong feeling of trust, a sense of responsibility for sound advice and watchful protection.

Then, and not until then, do you begin to define what this bank is, what makes it "different." It's different because the people it serves are different, and they in turn choose it as their bank because it is different.
