Green Bugs Infest Small Grain Field

"If you find areas in your field of small grain where the plants are turning yellow or dying, the trouble may be due to infestations of aphids or plant lice sometimes called 'green bugs'."

"These are small insects about the size of an ordinary pin head. They live on the grain over the winter and become active in the spring," said Dr. B.B. Fulton, entomologist at State College.

The damage they do is greatest when the spring temperatures are between 50 and 85 degrees Fahrenheit, he continued.

"So far as we know now," he added, "there is little we can do to check these bugs except hope for warmer weather."

When the temperature goes above 85degrees, a tiny wasp begins to multiply rapidly. The wasp sting the green bugs and lay eggs in their dead bodies.

The eggs hatch into grubs that produce more wasps which, in turn, sting more bugs to death and after a time the green bugs disappear from the field Dr. Fulton pointed out.

Cool, wet weather this spring has been conducive to heavy infestations of green bugs, he continued, and in some places farmers report that infire fields are being damaged. Others report small areas damaged here and there in their fields, particularly those which oats are growing.

As the weather warms up, however, the wasps may kill off the bugs before they do much more damage, Dr. Fulton added.
