LUMBERTON Pays HIGHER PRICES

The majority of the tobacco growers know which market pays the highest prices, and they patronize that market. Right at this time tobacco is sold slowly. Other markets may be through selling at noon time, or early in the afternoon, but not so with LUMBERTON... Lumberton's warehousemen have faced a capacity sale every day since the Border Belt opened... right now the Lumberton market is far ahead of any previous season in poundage and satisfied patrons. Higher prices for tobacco keep the crowd coming to Lumberton.

Just remember this . . . . a growing market is always a high market. The quality of the leaf sold governs the average prices. The popularity of a market is the best indication of higher prices.

Tune in on WPTF daily at 12:35 for market report and sales schedule... and remember every scheduled sale is guaranteed selling time.

Hear the "High Dollar Harvesters" every Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday night in the City Park 14's FREE.
