Time to Plant Fall Winter Gardens

Farm families who wish to enter the fall and winter garden contest sponsored by the State College extension service are urged to start planting their gardens as soon as possible.

The first step recommended by extension specialist is that of preparing the soil and supplying it with plenty of stable manure or other organic matter.

Among the vegetables that may be planted in August are: Broccoli, mustard, Swiss chard, endive, lettuce, cauliflower, cabbage, turnips, carrots, beets, celery, collards, snap beans, lima beans, sugar corn, and tomatoes.

Broccoli, cauliflower and Chinese cabbage may be planted in hills 15 inches apart, or the seed may be sown in a plant bed and transplanted later. Side dress the plants with nitrate of soda three or four weeks after transplanting.

Sow celery in plant beds and cover with burlap or heavy paper, but remove the covering as soon as the plants appear above the ground. Transplant to field 6 or 8 weeks later. Set plants in double rows 6 to 8 inches apart.

Celery will not mature in acid soil. Wood ashes or hydrated lime
