VACATION days over now, and with many happy recollections of gorgeous days in the out-of-doors, our thoughts once more turn toward the home. Again, during the fall and winter, we look forward to restful, comforting evenings at home at the family fireside. The days are growing shorter now, and in the twilight we see lights beckoning us home again to that great institution, the Family.

COLDER weather and less sunshine make the family fireside more warm and welcome than ever before. Deep, downy chairs "far from the chilling blast," and good books, lure us from the outdoors. The home is coming into its own again.
