Farm Kitchens Have Their Faces Lifted

Three hundred and twenty-five North Carolina farm houses are now having "their faces lifted" in a contest sponsored by home demonstration workers of the State College extension service. Commenting on the contest, Ruth Current, state home agent, said: "These dark, dusty, grimy, hideaway pantries and cupboards are going to be done away with or else be given more light and made usable." "These kitchens are going to be attractive with soft, pleasing colors—green, yellow, or light blue—also, the worktop surface will be white." An efficient kitchen, she said, requires a separate working surface for each kind of work to be done, the arrangement of large equipment in step-saving sequence, that working surfaces be close together, that equipment be at a convenient height, and that small equipment be grouped around a center where it is first used. Finding the correct height for working surfaces, so that women can work without stooping or unnecessarily straining their bodies, is of the utmost importance. To find this height, she said, stand erect, rest the arm comfortably against the body, and bend the elbow at a right angle. Then measure the distance from elbow to floor, and subtract eight inches to get proper height for working surfaces. Again, stand erect. Place hand palm down at a comfortable height on an imaginary table. If the distance from the floor differs with that obtained from the first measurement, divide the difference.

The contest, under the direction of Pauline Gordon, extension specialist in home management, and her assistant, Mamie N. Whitman, is being conducted in Alexandria, Avery, Caldwell, Chatham, Davie,
