PARAMOUNT-KINSTON—NOISE LIKE A HURRICANE
PROVED TOUGH ASSIGNMENT

What does a hurricane sound like?
 Arthur Johns, recording supervisor viator at the Samuel Goldwyn Studio had a hard time finding any one who could accurately answer that question, although there are a good many people in Southern California who have been through hurricanes.

It was important to Johns to find out, because it was his job to put the sound of a hurricane on film and he found it a tough assignment.

Johns had his best idea when he heard the sound of the "Hurricane" which struck Dorothy Lamour and Tom Hall at the Paramount Theatre in Kinston, N. C., Sat. and Mon. Jan. 23 and 24th, at the head of a great cast, including Mary Astor, G. Aubrey Smith, Thomas Mitchell, Raymond Massey, John Carradine, and Jerome Cowan.

When Samuel Goldwyn assigned Johns to record the hurricane, the recording supervisor thought it would be fairly simple. Hurricanes are common enough and there are many books written of them. He had never heard a hurricane, so he started out by looking up several people who had.

"Each one had a little different description," he says. "When it was added up I know a hurricane made a lot of noise."

Johns didn't give up. He experimented with wind noises and believes he has hit on the right ones. To the howling of the wind, he added the smacking of waves, the slapping of palm fronds and the falling of rock walls. Everyday he recorded something new. One day he blew the
