STATE OF CHICKENS

Galaxy, Feb. 4.—North Carolina farmers can increase their poultry income by from ten to fifteen million dollars a year through improved stock, proper handling and intelligent marketing.

J. T. Albritton, a director of the Farmers Cooperative Exchange, declared here today.

As a basis for his statement, Mr. Albritton cited government records showing that although the six New England States feed 800,000 fewer birds than North Carolina, their poultry income is more than three times as great as this State's.

J. T. ALBRITTON

"The first step that we must take towards pulling our poultry income up from the present six million dollars a year to a figure more in line with the twenty million dollars of the New England States, is to buy better chicks," declared Mr. Albritton, who, as director of the FCX represents that organization in this district, of which Duplin County is a part.

No farmer, he said, should buy "just baby chicks," but rather should insist upon U. S. Approved chicks or better.

Mr. Albritton, who has just returned from a board meeting of the farmer-owned and farmer-controlled FCX in Raleigh, reported that the cooperative has established a chick and egg marketing service as a means of helping farmers to better poultry profits. Arrangements have already been made through the department to supply State farmers this year with a million U. S. Approved chicks, all hatched in North Carolina by members of the State Hatchery, and from flocks of high egg producing records.

The FCX is also establishing State and federal licensed egg-grading stations around its 23 branch warehouses and is already marketing eggs for farmers at premium prices. Mr. Albritton suggested that it will be good business on the part of farmers to book their orders for U. S. Approved chicks early, as indications are for a shortage of good chicks, and the U. S. Department of Agriculture predicts that 1938 will be a good poultry year.
