Plant Disease Sleuths On The Alert For Tobacco Menace

A staff of federal "sleuths" will be on the alert this month throughout the Carolinas, Virginia and Tennessee in an attempt to head off a "saboteur" that threatens to seriously cripple the multi-million-dollar tobacco industry.

The "saboteur" is a disease that is known as blue mold and the "sleuths" are members of a plant disease warning service operated by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Last year, following an exceptionally warm January, blue mold was discovered in Marion County, S. C., on February 14 -- a good month ahead of its normal appearance. Warnings were flashed to growers throughout the area, so plant beds might be protected from onslaughts of the disease, which is spread by air-borne spores. Even so, the blue mold wave spread so swiftly that plant stands were said to average only about 80 per cent of normal and a serious shortage of plants developed.

Approved chemical fungicides should be applied on beds when plants are the size of a dime, with repeated applications every 10 to 14 days, in order to protect them with a coating that will ward off blue mold fungi. Growers who have followed such a program, according to plant pathologist Howard R. Garriss of State College, have been able to more than double the number of healthy plants from the same size bed.

"Results over a number of years now prove the tobacco grower can successfully use ferbam or zineb for blue mold control and assure healthy plants in a section where the disease wipes out unprotected plan beds," Mr. Garriss said. "Comparative costs of growing enough plants for 10 acres, both with and without this chemical protection, show the grower who applies the fungicides can save around $120 in an ordinary year through successfully producing his plant needs on smaller beds."

The chemicals referred to are both modern organic fungicides, developed by Du Pont research in the field of agricultural chemicals. Ferbam is the generic name for the active chemical in "Fermate" fungicide, well-known blue mold control. Zineb is the generic name of the active chemical in another blue mold control material, available as "Parzate" fungicide, and also under several other trade names.

Neither is curative in action, but when applied before the disease strikes they will destroy blue mold spores which come in contact with them, or prevent these spores from attaching themselves to the plant leaves.

Mr. Garriss warned that seeding of plant beds too early or too thickly may result in tender plants which do not do well when transplanted in the field.

general manager of the North Carolina Cotton Cooperative Exchange, predicted that cotton this year will sell for 40 cents a pound.

Mann was one of the principal speakers at the opening of the 8th annual North Carolina Association of Soil Conservation district supervisors opening a two day session here.

Mann reported that the government is asking the cotton farmers for 16 million bales in 1951.
