Tips on Touring

A plain six-inch ruler can save you many dollars in costly brake or clutch repairs if you know how to use it.

Now that fair weather is luring us to longer trips, it's a good idea to get that ruler out immediately. And here's what to do according to Shell Oil's automotive experts.

Press down on your brake pedal. With your ruler, measure the distance your brake goes down before it takes effect. It should be at about two inches. If the measurement is less, your brakes are too tight and need adjusting. If it is appreciably more, your brake lining has probably worn a bit, so brakes again need adjusting. If your foot goes clear down to the floorboard before you feel results, chances are your brakes need fluid or re-lining.

Under any circumstances, it's wise to have the brake fluid in your master cylinder checked every thousand miles and replenished if necessary. Lack of the correct amount of fluid is likely to impede seriously your brake's effectiveness.

The clutch pedal should go down about one-third on the rigger before it disengages. Lining can create thick pads of clutch, which can cause the car to lose a lot of money by wearing down the clutch.
