VIRGINIA RAIL

When a fisherman hears grunting sounds coming from a fresh-water marsh, he might think, at first, that some baby pigs had wander-ed into the reeds and cattails. But if he knows his way around the outdoors, he realizes that the noises are made by Virginia Rails.

The shy birds, though greaeful in actions, just aren't singers. Besides grunting, they make kick-ing sounds. And sometimes they call, 'wak-wak-wak' or 'kid-ick-kid-

It is fairly easy to hear their harsh noises, says the National Wildlife Federation, but not so easy to see the birds themselves. They live among the tangled plants along streams and marshes, and usually stay under cover. When disturbed, they try to hide where the growth is thickest, instead of taking to the air, taking to the air,

Among the weeds and rushes, they also build their homes. In a nest made of grasses, the female lays from five to twelve eggs which are white or creamy with a few brown and purple spots. The parents take turns in sitting on the eggs until they are hatched.

The baby Rails are greenish black at first. After a few months, the tinge of green disappears, and they are just plain black. Later they begin to resemble their parents.

Both the male and the female adults are reddish brown birds. The feathers on their backs are streaked with black. Behind their legs and under their short, perky tails, they are marked with black and white bars. Their cheeks are gray, and their throats are white. For pecking in the marshes, they have long, slightly curved bills. When fully grown, the birds are about nine or ten inches long.

With stender, delicate legs, they walk daintily about in the marshes, looking for food. They are especially fond of insects, and they also est wild rice, wild oats, and other grass seeds.

In the summer, when they are raising their families. Virginia Rails live in southern Canada and the northern half of the United States. To escape cold weather, they spend the winter in the southern half of the United States.

NOTES FROM

M.Y.U. 6.45 p.m.

Duplin Public Health Service

Raleigh, N. C. - The present lay public acceptance of vaccinaons as a means of preventing and controlling such diseases as smallpox have not always met with favor as indicated by the legal difficulties of early Tar Heel physicians back in the 18th century. As a reminder of just how far North Carolina medicine has progressed since the early days of our republic, the North Carolina Medical Journal in ent article, cited some of the legal difficulties of pioneer physi-cians regarding the practice of inoculating patients for smallpox.

As far back at 1795 Dr. Andrew Scott of New Bern was apparently attempting to inoculate patients for smallpox. The writer of this article Dorothy Long of Lexington, Ky. refers to the works of A. T. Dill Jr., and his description of eight-eenth century New Bern. Dill On Monday, May 19 East Carolina County teachers — Mrs Pearl C. College conferred degrees on 249 graduates of the fall, winter, and spring quarters of 1951-52. President John D. Messlek of East Carolina presided at ceremonies conducted in Wright auditorium as the closing event of the 43rd annual commencement of the college. Dr. D. Hollis Edens, president of Duke University, was principal speaker! Hines Britt and Miss Virginia War. the matter, one cannot be sure that Dr. Scott did inoculate any pa-tients, though it seems probable.

Almost 40 years later, at Edenton, two other doctors were accus-ed of the same offense. Another writer, J. B. Cheshire, in Nonnulla, gives extracts from a manuscript opy of a bill of indictment drawn n February of 1798 by Attorney Blake Baker against Frederick Ra-make and John Beasley Practiioners of Physic and Surgery. The indictment described at length the state of alarm in the people of Edenton, and concluded that the action of the two doctors was 'to ne great damage, danger and nui sance of the inhabitants of the said Town.' 'The indictment also set forth that the two doctors did unlawfully and injuriously inoculate and cause to be inoculated divers persons.'

No records of any trial were found by author Cheshire, so it seems probable that the doctors vere not tried, or at least were not convicted of any offense. But in any case, today's mass use of inoculations as a disease preven-tive is a far cry from North Carolina of the 18th Century.
