Jail Inmate Here Studies Language

The following was written by Vance A. Perry who is in the local jail awaiting trial on several charges. To pass the time away he began the study of plural words and asked that we publish it. Here it is: THIS LANGUAGE OF OURS! While in the act of reading an interesting article sometime ago, I ran into the word, matin, which I have been 'running down' ever since.

I wish somebody would explain to me why it is that the word, matin, means 'of or pertaining to' or used as a morning, especially the early morning, and the word 'matinee' means 'an afternoon performance or entertainment.'

For the life of me, I can't see why adding two E's should make such a difference in time. Of course this foregoing peculiarity of our language is as nothing compared to the devilish variety of plurals we have to contend with. Now there is really something nobody can fathom. Why, for instance couldn't one say, 'The mice ran all over the nice?' If mice is

STATE INCOME TAX FACTS

North Carolina Individual Tax Returns

Remember to mail your return before APRIL 15

(This is one of a series of articles prepared by the Committee on State Taxation, North Carolina Association of Certified Public Accountants, in cooperation with the North Carolina Department of Revenue.)

Short Form Article No. 5 - The North Carolina

Last year almost 350,000 North Carolina income taxpayers used the short form income tax return, according to the North Carolina Department of Revenue. The short form was authorized by the 1953 State Legislature and allows you to claim a deduction equal to 10 per cent of your total gross income instead of itemizing your contributions, medical expenses, interest, taxes, etc. If you use the short form, you will not be entitled to any other deductions including the deduction for non-taxable dividends.

The North Carolina short form is generally equivalent for salaried individuals to the Federal form 1040A because of the standard deduction involved. Salary, dividends or interest income in excess of $5,000 must be reported, however, on the North Carolina short form while the Federal long form is required when the salary income exceeds $5,000 or other income exceeds $100. On the North Carolina short form the standard deduction is limited to a maximum of $500.

The Federal form 1040A, remittance for the tax due must be sent in with the North Carolina short form in the same way that it would be sent with the North Carolina long form. If both husband and wife are required to file North Carolina returns, then both must file on the same type of form. If both are eligible to file on the short form and one elects the short form, then both must file short form returns. If one elects to file on the long form, then both must file long form returns.

Retirement Income

The 3 per cent annuity rule described above is applied on the North Carolina return to retirement income if you contributed to the retirement fund during your employment. Upon recovery of your investment in retirement payments, you must report the total amount received each year as income.

Business Loss

If you operate a business and have a loss during the year, on the North Carolina return you may carry the net economic loss forward and deduct it on your following year's return. If any part of the loss is still left, it may be carried forward one more year; it cannot be carried back to a prior year as can be done under the Federal law.

Subsistence

Under existing North Carolina law the fair value of free board, lodging, and other subsistence (except the rental value of a home furnished to a minister or quarters for orphanage employees) must be reported as income. Federal law requires the reporting of the value of subsistence except under certain circumstances when furnished for the convenience of your employer.

Securities

If you sell stocks or bonds during the year for a profit, the profit is reportable on your North Carolina income tax form. If you have a loss, your loss can be deducted provided you have owned the stocks or bonds for more than one year. If you owned the stocks or bonds for less than one year, you may deduct any loss up to the extent of any profit that you have from the sale of stocks

Did you know this fact about ...

North Carolina has no transportation shortage of oil or gasoline. Our supplies of gasoline and oil are delivered by:

- ocean tankers from Texas to Wilmington and Morehead City
- by pipeline from Louisiana to Greensboro
- by tank cars from oil fields to many cities
- by barges to Elizabeth City, Washington and Fayetteville
- by tank truck to distributing points all over the State

Every important port or terminal in this system of distribution is in a community of progressive and enlightened people who favor "legal control" of the sale of malt beverages in the best interests of wholesome and law abiding conditions.
