Hardy Baker Produces Hogs At 12 1/2 Cents Per Pound

Hardy Baker, Snow Hill, route 2, said today that his hog production program has been improved considerably through observing the grading system at the Frosty Morn plant, in Kinston.

Baker has 36 sows in his program which should mean that about 600 hogs will be marketed this year. "I plan to market these hogs at Frosty Morn, as I have in the past," Baker said.

Last year records kept by Baker show that his average cost was between 12 and one-half cents to 13 cents per pound.

He expresses the idea that through accurate record keeping he knows where he stands and what his swine program is doing. "Since I have been marketing hogs at Frosty Morn I am marketing a better type hog and the difference in the price means a little more money."

"Yes, sir," Baker concluded. "Frosty Morn has definitely helped me." Adv.

The Confederate Festival not only will be an event of historic significance, but all funds raised by patrons' contributions, admission fees, sale of souvenirs, etc., will be used later to help finance the commission's carefully planned program during the four-year commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the Civil War, 1861-1966.

Saturday night from 9 p. m. to 1 a. m., the costume ball will take place at William Neal Reynolds Coliseum. "Confederate Belles" will be presented and a Grand March will follow the presentations. Music for the ball will be by the Johnny Long and Jan Garber Orchestras.

Many State and national leaders, as well as stage and television personalities, have been invited to participate in the two-day Festival.

The North Carolina Confederate Commission was established by the 1959 General Assembly. Col. Hugh Dorch of Goldsboro is chairman, and also chairman of the North Carolina Confederate Corporation, a non-profit organization whose purpose is to raise funds to supplement the State appropriation. The commission seeks to publish an accurate roster of North Carolina troops in the Civil War; a North Carolina Confederate Fact Book which will include a list of battles and skirmishes, and the history of the State in the war.

Among the other items the commission seeks are audio-visual aids presenting the story of North Carolina in the Civil War; assistance in various Civil War Era publications; an historical drama; and the erection of markers.

Hector McLean of Lumberton is chairman of the Festival in charge of the two-day Confederate Festival. Norman Larson is Executive Secretary of the North Carolina Confederate Centennial Commission.

N. C. Confederate Festival, May 19-20

Both Inside Times Must
One hundred years ago, in May of 1861, North Carolinians volunteered in thousands to fight against their countrymen to the north.

Young men put away their full-length coats of the day to don grey Confederate uniforms and, following a short training period, marched into Virginia where men from both sides of the Mason-Dixon line massed for battle.

History has recorded the actions of these Tar Heels and the thousands who followed during the four years of the Civil War First at Bethel, Farthest at Gettysburg and Lost at Appomattox.

Now, one hundred years later North Carolina will note its entry into the Confederate States of America with an exciting two-day Confederate Festival. It will be held in Raleigh on May 19 and 20.

Appropriately, the May 20th date falls on the nationwide observance of Armed Forces Day when the Nation takes note of its unified strength in the new Space Age.

North Carolina is rich in the history of Civil War. There were 11 battles and 73 skirmishes fought in the State. The largest battle was at Bentonville, on March 10-21, in 1865. It was the last major Confederate offensive.

Through the North Carolina Confederate Centennial Commission, the State has undertaken an ambitious program to tell the story of North Carolina's role in the Civil War. Its first major effort will be the Confederate Festival.

Invitations have been sent to approximately 1,500 North Carolinians to serve as patrons for the two-day Festival. The patrons, who are being asked to contribute $100 towards the Centennial Commission's program, will be guests of honor at all events.

The gala Confederate Festival begins in Raleigh Friday afternoon, May 19, with reception at the Executive Mansion. The reception will honor patrons and "Confederate Belles," who will be presented at the Festival's Ball on Saturday night.

Friday night at Memorial Auditorium, two Civil War Era dramas will be presented for the patrons, who also will be guests at an after-theatre buffet.

Saturday's program begins at 10 a. m. with a devotional service and at 11 a. m. a mammoth parade featuring floats and military units will move from Memorial Auditorium,
