Nobody Cares

By Elery Guthrie

As we approach the sunset of life and the horizon seems to be growing dim, we can look back on our life and realize there's nothing worth while but giving of self and love.

It's service that makes life worth living.

A gift from the Master above.

It's a pleasure to give others pleasure;

It's wealth to give money away;

It's honor to give others honor.

It blesses you all through the days.

You only follow your Savior,

Who taught, "Tis more blessed to give,

When you make your role of behavior,

Giving, that others may live.

If the above could only be the philosophy of the young, we would not hurt when we hear the aged saying, "Nobody cares." Having heard these words spoken only a short while ago by one who is on the aging side hurt very deeply, as I came to realize my selfishness in not giving, not saying that much needed word of encouragement so desired by all of us - why do we have to grow older to learn to live?

How many of us realize the loneliness of old age, even though surrounded by people, one can be lonely. The "nobody cares" is really not true, if we would only stop and know God cares all the time. His love is greater than any other love in all this world. True, but sometimes it's hard to recognize and feel when all around us things seem to be tumbling down -- recognizing this, why can't we all take a little time out to be more kind to each other, a little more neighborly of the aging? Telling ourselves, some day God willing, "We'll be counted among the aging too."

Jesus Christ is the great herald of the summer eternities of God's love. Go to church next Sunday and learn of the power of love and goodness, beauty and truth. Learn about the abiding things.

WASHINGTON REPORT

Your Congressman
DAVID N. HENDERSON

Probably the most important legislation likely to be considered by Congress this year is the proposal that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act be extended and expanded to give the President broad discretionary powers to reduce tariffs on foreign imports.

This legislation will undoubtedly have a very direct effect on virtually all American industry, labor and agriculture.

Historically, America has had a favorable balance of trade. That is, our exports have traditionally exceeded our imports; both in terms of tonnage and in terms of dollars value. We have largely exported agricultural products and manufactured goods; and imported raw materials. Within recent years, however, with the tremendous industrial expansion in Japan, Hong Kong, and Formosa in Asia; and in West Germany, Italy and other nations in Europe, both the quantity and nature of our imports have changed considerably.

With a relatively low tariff, foreign manufacturers, using low-wage labor coupled with modern production methods have been able to place on American markets quality products ranging from cotton cloth to transistor radios at much cheaper retail prices than comparable American-made products. This has, naturally, had an adverse effect upon both American industry and American labor.

On the other side of the picture, our agricultural exports of products like tobacco and fibers have remained relatively stable, but exports of manufactured goods has dropped to the point where our balance of trade is no longer so favorable.

It is proposed by some that we should provide for a drastic increase in our tariff in order to protect American industry, but it goes without saying that unless we buy foreign products with American dollars, foreign nations cannot buy our exports with American dollars. Such a tariff might prove favorable to some aspect of our economy, but might have an adverse effect upon agriculture by reducing agricultural exports.

All of us in Congress will be called upon to exercise sound judgment and discretion in an attempt to preserve our valuable agricultural exports and work toward improving our balance of trade without inflicting further injury to industry and labor now being adversely affected by cheap foreign imports. The President's proposal has not yet been spelled out in a legislative bill, and the Ways and Means Committee of the House will, of course, give careful consideration to the matter. Based on Committee reports and other available evidence, we shall be required to make a decision which will almost invariably hurt some segment of the American economy. We must try to provide for this damage to be held to a minimum.

During the fall while Congress was in recess, I spent the first five weeks visiting the Post Offices in the nine counties of the Third Congressional District. This afforded me an opportunity to see the physical condition of each post office. I was impressed with the several new post office buildings and the many improvements that had recently been made to others. However in many cases, especially among third and fourth class post offices, I found a desperate need for further new or improved facilities.

These visits afforded me the opportunity to talk with the postmasters and other postal employees throughout the District, and in many instances we have been able to improve postal service to the patrons upon discovering the specific needs.

Following the tour of the District, I visited with the Regional Office of the Post Office Department in Atlanta and discussed problems of the postal service in the Third District with Mr. J. W. Askew, the Regional Director and my staff. I also referred other problems to Postmaster General Day in Washington.

Following the post office visits, I spent several days at Seymour-Johnson Air Force Base in Goldsboro, Camp Lejeune, and at the Marine Air Station Cherry Point, studying the problems of the Civil Service and other civilian employees at the military installations.

These several weeks will be most beneficial to me as a member of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, and I believe that this better understanding of the problems of the Postal Department and Civil Service will result in many benefits to the people of the Third Congressional District.

There are about 6,500 Civil Service employees at the military base about 1,000 postal workers, about 1,000 other Civil Service employees, and about 1,550 other workers, employed directly or indirectly by the Federal Government, in the Third Congressional District. The financial and general welfare of this large group of our people is of great importance to the economy of all of their counties.

Washington Report - David Henderson of the Congressional District.

During my first year in Congress, I have found many people of the Third Congressional District vitally interested in obtaining employment under Civil Service procedures, which also cover Post Office positions. Although the Civil Service Act has been in effect for 79 years, I have found that very few of our people understand the basic requirements and benefits of this Law.

The Civil Service Act was enacted to stop the appointments to positions in government from being made strictly on a political basis or the so-called "Spoils System." The Act also gives postal and other government employees many rights and protection from being removed from office without just cause.

When a postal or government position becomes vacant, the Civil Service Commission conducts a competitive examination, after notice to interested parties, grades the examinations, makes a personal evaluation of those who make a passing grade, and submits an Eligibility Register to the hiring or appointing authority. The selection or nomination for appointment is then made from the top three (3) on the Eligibility Register.

The Veterans Preference Act provides that a wartime veteran shall be given five (5) points, or in the case of a veteran with a (10) points, to be added to his numerical scores. This Act further provides that the ten-point compensable veteran shall be placed at the top of the Eligibility Register. A non-veteran may be appointed from the Register if his position is above a veteran, but if his name is below that of the veteran, then the veteran must be given preference and cannot be passed over.

This Civil Service procedure for employment is fairly simple. It gives the employing agency a limited choice but has generally worked well to provide our government with the most qualified employees. Once an employee obtains a Career Civil Service Status, he is provided many benefits, such as retirement and seniority rights.

I would urge all persons who are interested in postal or Civil Service employment to obtain the necessary information regarding the Civil Service procedure and become familiar with the basic requirements of this Law.

Wayne Co. Annual Livestock Show

The Annual Livestock Show and Sale has been set for April 3 and 4 at the Wayne County Fair Grounds. Animals will be brought in on April 3 and the Show, Banquet and Sale will be on April 4.

Club members should be spending time now seeing that calves are properly halter broken and trained for the show. These steers should be washed and curried several times in order to train their hair coat properly. This washing can be done any sunny day, provided they are allowed to dry before returning to the barn.

Calves should be eating about 2 1/2 pounds of grain per 100 lb. of body weight. They should also be eating about 1 1/2 lb. of cotton seed meal per head per day.
