

Thinking About College?

If you are planning to go to college, will a two-year or four-year institution be your choice? Do you know how colleges select students? What are admission and scholarship requirements? How well prepared are you for entrance exams, interviews, and application letters of reference? It's important to find out early, for then the student will be academically qualified.

What about the costs of a college education? Early financial planning is important and will help avoid sudden large expenses for which parents might be unprepared.

To help students and their parents choose carefully and wisely, Barnes & Noble have published the most reliable and comprehensive single source of information on American colleges, "College Entrance Counselor."

This remarkable book, recently revised by the American Library Association, covers in one volume all of the country's two- and four-year colleges, giving information on accreditation, entrance examinations, cost of college, religious affiliation, admission, expenses, scholarships, aid, placement services, and much more. 3,000 colleges and universities are thoroughly covered.

This book also devotes an entire chapter to the many scholarships offered by national, state and local governments, by industry, labor, foundations, other agencies.

Teachers and guidance workers will find that use of the career guides and directories will help the student answer such questions as: "Should I go to college?" "What college most effectively meets my educational and professional needs?" "How can I start preparing for college, academically and financially?"

All aspects of preparation are presented in "College Entrance Counselor," enabling students to be better equipped to choose the right college.

An excellent companion to "College Entrance Counselor" is "College Entrance Examinations," a guidebook designed to help improve study habits and aid in preparing for actual test situations. The following are examples of the tests in this book: college entrance examinations, including practice tests, with explanations, sample questions and suggestions; aptitude tests, including the recently developed Figure Analogies; achievement tests, including all modern languages as well as Latin and Greek, and special stress on mathematics. In addition, there are special entrance exams such as college boards, psychological tests, service academy exams for West Point, Annapolis, and Air Force Academy. Competitive scholarship exams are also presented.

Teachers, students and their parents will find "College Entrance Counselor" in the paperback edition at $3.50, and "College Entrance Examinations," also paperback, $1.95, the most practical books available for college preparation.

Rodeo Is Fitting Attraction For State Fair

The sport of Rodeo is one of the largest in the country from the standpoint of paid spectator attendance. It is fitting that one is sponsored and featured this year as the stellar attraction of the great North Carolina State Fair, since basically the Fair is the show window of the country's oldest and largest industry - agriculture and the livestock business - and it is from this industry that most of the skills displayed in rodeo competition had their origin.

The basic contests of World's Championship Rodeo are those of riding and roping skills acquired by ranch cowboys in working cattle and breaking horses in everyday ranch work. The first Rodeos were impromptu affairs in which neighboring ranch hands of the South, Southwest and Northwest gathered, usually on Sunday afternoons and holidays to compete against one another to see which cowboys were the more skilled in roping and riding. Hence were born the contests of calf roping and bareback riding, and the other two main events of today's professional sport now organized on a national basis, steer wrestling and wild bull riding were the natural outgrowth and the result of the challenge of conquering the wild longhorn steer and the fierce fighting Brahma bull.

As the livestock industry grew and developed, so did the popularity and the competition of the neighborhood gathering to determine the superiority of the various ranch hands until they became statewide contests and finally the sport grew until national organizations with uniform rules for the contests were established.

Both Pecos, Texas and North Platte, Nebraska claim title to being the scene of the first Rodeos where admission charges to the public were made and where cash prizes were paid the winning cowboys. Both cities claim the year 1873 and both still produce an annual Rodeo as a goodwill gesture to promote the interest of the livestock industry in their respective areas.

The first national organization of the followers and devotees of the rough and tumble sport of the range was called the Cowboys Turf Association, and was organized in Boston, scene of a big time Rodeo in 1892, and it was followed in 1945 by the present national organization - the Rodeo Cowboys Association - with a membership of some four thousand professional cowboys, cowgirls and specialty act performers who annually stage some six hundred nationally sanctioned Rodeos that play to an estimated twenty million avid American and Canadian fans.

The Cowboys first association, called the Turf, was organized to fill the need for uniform rules and regulations and to police the sport and assure the fun loving public that Rodeo would take its deserved place and rank as a major sport, preserving the skills and traditions of the old time cowboy and cowgirl and bringing thrilling entertainment as well as the rugged wild action of the contests for man's superiority over his semi-domesticated animals from the ranch country. It took the name of Turf from its slow process of organization and growth and movement towards its present day status as the sport which plays to more people, both indoors and outdoors, for paid admission than any other.

Actually Rodeo does play to more people indoors and outdoors than any other sport, since neither football or baseball play indoors and Rodeos are staged in every one of the fifty states from the smallest hamlets of the West to the largest metropolitan cities of the east and in Europe, also, as well as in Canada and South America, and this year for the first time in the Orient.

The present day national organization, the Rodeo Cowboys Association, with a membership of approximately four thousand, supervises the sport, establishes uniform playing rules, and maintains the record of the winnings of all its members and actually names a champion in each of the five major contests each calendar year. The individual being the cowboy who wins the total greatest number of dollars in a single event in a year and thereby becoming the World's Champion in that particular event for the year. There is, too, an annual Allaround Champion Cowboy. This individual is the fellow who wins the total greatest number of dollars in two or more events within a year.

Therefore, since Rodeo had its beginning and its origin in everyday workings of the country's and the state's oldest and largest industry - the livestock business - and since the Fair is in itself the show window of that industry, it is fitting that World's Championship Rodeo, the nation's most popular sports attraction, should be the stellar attraction of the Fair, featured for its people and the Fair fans in its wonderful and beautiful and wholly adequate State Fair Arena; that the ranching and livestock industry would be host to the dangerous and amazing game of Rodeo which had its humble beginning in the everyday workings of the industry which feeds the nation and that with Rodeo has grown to a multimillion-dollar business so vital to the economy and way of life of the great State of North Carolina.

It is fitting that State Fair Arena should be the scene of a sport which has grown to an attraction that annually plays to more than twenty million Americans who certainly couldn't be wrong about the tremendous and irrefragable appeal of a sport that annually pays to its contestants more than four million dollars a year prize money for their ability to excel in skill which they have acquired in our own livestock industry.
