South's Pulpwood Output Reached New High In '61

Production of pulpwood in the South reached 60 per cent of the national total in 1961, according to information related by the U. S. Forest Service.

Southern production reached 24,230,276 cords, an increase of 3 per cent over 1960 levels.

Georgia harvested over 4.9 million cords to remain the South's leading producer. Alabama was second with 3.3 million and North Carolina third with a harvest of over 2.2 million cords.

Top producing counties in North Carolina in 1961 were Bladen, Brunswick and Onslow.

The Forest Service report again revealed an increase in the harvest of hardwood bolts while noting that the national total from standing timber has declined from a high of 60 per cent in 1961. It has remained virtually unchanged at 16.5 million cords over the past three years.
