Rights of Law Abiding Citizens On Firearms

Appearing before the House Ways and Means Committee in Washington Monday, attorney Arthur Beckham of Statesville urged that any legislation regulating firearms should fully protect the rights of law-abiding citizens to obtain and keep firearms. Beckham represented the North Carolina Rifle and Pistol association composed of approximately 4,500 members in North Carolina. He was introduced to the Committee by Congressman James T. Broyhill. The Committee is now considering a number of proposals for gun-control legislation.

In his testimony, Beckham spoke in opposition to the bill endorsed by the Johnson Administration which he charged is "so restrictive and its effects are so far reaching that it could, over a period of time, disarm law-abiding American citizens completely." The Statesville attorney explained that the White House Bill would delegate "to an appointed official . . . almost unlimited authority to make any capricious or arbitrary rules which he, in his discretion, might desire."

Beckham contended other measures would be more advisable in correcting abuses in firearms traffic that now exist. He proposed a system modeled after provisions of the North Carolina law. Under this plan, any person wishing to purchase a hand gun must first procure a permit to purchase either from the Clerk of Superior Court or the sheriff of his own county. This simple requirement, Beckham said, goes directly to the heart of the problem since the person's character and qualifications must be passed upon locally before the permit is issued. Insane persons, criminals and minors would be eliminated in efforts to obtain weapons.

"The present problem could be corrected, to the degree that any legislative action can deal with the issue, if a Uniform Firearms Act could be adopted by all 50 states," Beckham declared.
