Be Extra Careful
Driving At Night

Night driving calls for that "something extra" both in car handling skills and in observance of safety precautions.

The words of caution come from the American Insurance Association, which points out that the death rate per million miles driven is about three times greater at night the Association advises. Make sure your lights and turn signals are in proper working order, and don't fail to use your dimming switch to lessen the glare for approaching motorists.

TO THE EDITOR

I think the children of Coolsmee are to be congratulated on how nice and orderly they celebrated Halloween on Saturday night. We had around 75 little spooks and goblins to come to our door for treats, and all were very well behaved. Of course it was a little trouble on my part to answer the doorbell so much but I did enjoy seeing the children and felt good each time I went back inside after talking with them. Most of them remembered to say "Thank You" too. So I feel we should say "Thanks" to them for making Halloween a little more enjoyable for those who greet them with treats.
