Sixth Congressional District Under Possible Federal Control

U. S. Rep. Horace E. Kornegay voiced concern last week that three of the four counties in the Sixth Congressional District he represents in Congress may in the future "find Federal examiners controlling our voting processes."

The third-term Congressman in a speech delivered to the West Durham Businessmen's Association, said that Durham, Orange and Guilford Counties -- as well as 21 other North Carolina counties -- could conceivably come under the provisions of the Voting Rights Act of 1965.

Congressman Kornegay pointed out that the law passed by the first session of the current 89th Congress automatically covers a State or political subdivision such as a county or municipality if (1) any test or device, such as a literacy requirement, is maintained as a prerequisite to registration or voting as of November, 1964, and (2) had a total voting population of which less than 50 per cent were registered or actually voted in the last Presidential election.

The Greensboro resident, who has been traveling throughout the district since Congress recessed in late October, referred to recent announcements that the Census Bureau would undertake in the near future a special census in 24 North Carolina counties, including the three in his district to determine current population figures.

Congressman Kornegay said he has been informed by the Census Bureau that Durham, Orange and Guilford Counties are "borderline" insofar as population and voting records -- under the Voting Rights Act -- are concerned. All three counties, he said, were close to the 50 per cent voting minimum contained in the new law and that "knowing what tremendous growth we have experienced here in the Piedmont over the past few years, I am fearful of the consequences."

The Sixth District Representative charged that the

"weird and complicated 50 per cent formula" in the law was inequitable. He said that "because many of our citizens cared less last November, we are in danger of being penalized."

Because a number of our potential voters -- white and non-white -- are apathetic or at least not enthusiastic enough about some of the political candidates on the ballot, we may come under the aegis of federal vote control -- even though there is not a scintilla of evidence that voting discrimination is in practice in this area."

Kornegay took issue with some of the other provisions of the new Act, such as the feature which provides that a subdivision may be removed from the Act's coverage only by filing a suit in a three-judge Federal Court in the District of Columbia. He said this "divests" North Carolina Federal judges of jurisdiction and places the case in Washington, D.C. "This," he said, "expresses complete lack of confidence in the integrity of the Federal District Courts of this nation. This also means that, if we are covered, we must bear the trouble and expense of going to Washington to plead our case."

He further pointed out that compelling the States or political subdivisions to go to court to prove their innocence is a "principle which is totally foreign to our time-honored tradition of American jurisprudence. We would have to show to the three judges sitting in Washington that we were innocent, even though no one had accused us of wrongful doing in the first place."

He said he could think of no other law which "requires the accused first to file a law suit to declare his innocence and secondly to remove the jurisdiction to a foreign court."

The young North Carolina Congressman, who formerly served as a Superior Court solicitor, said he had not been able to discover any complaints regarding voter discrimination in the Sixth District. "If there has been no complaints regarding our voting procedures," he asked, "why go to all this trouble and expense in the first place?"

He estimated that the special census surveys in the 42 N. C. counties will cost the government approximately $800,000. "This is an awful lot to pay," he said, "to find out that we are too lazy to go to the polls or to discover that we don't really care enough who gets elected."

Congressman Kornegay said the "voting privilege" should be available to "100 per cent of our qualified citizenry -- not 50 per cent, not 99 per cent."

He stated it was his "belief that it is reprehensible and indefensible to deprive any qualified citizen his right and obligation to vote. Any citizen and every citizen, regardless of his race, his color, sex or political suasion, should be guaranteed the choice to register and to vote." He also said that he would have supported an "equitable and nondiscriminatory" Voting Rights Act which was sectionally uniform and which did not penalize voting units where "apathy and lethargy" is found.

A--Yes. You can reduce it to any amount in excess of $1,000 in multiples of $500.

Q--Can you please tell me where I may obtain a record or discharge of a man who was in the Navy during the years 1915 to 1918.

Q--Could you tell me if my husband is eligible for a GI loan? He was inducted into the service in March, 1943 and was discharged in February, 1946.

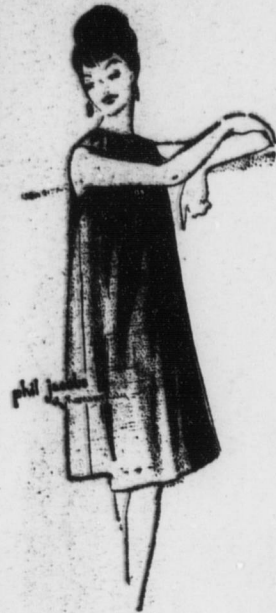

A--He would appear to be eligible. By adding, according to the formula, ten years to his date of discharge (February, 1946 to February, 1956) and then one year for each 90 days he was on active duty (there are 11 such 90-day periods in his two years and 11 months of service) we reach February, 1967 as the expiration period for his entitlement. However, he should check with his VA regional office to make this more explicit by using the actual dates of induction and discharge.

The best way to remember your wife's birthday is to forget it just once right after you get married.
