Senior Citizens

The Senior Citizens trip to the mountains planned for Thursday, June 1, has been postponed indefinitely.

Seventy-one Senior Citizens enjoyed a fun program on Monday conducted by Mrs. Frank Seders. First, she taught us a song, "Michael, Row Your Boat." Her accompanist was her tambourine. Then various members were asked to stand and after giving their name asked to tell of something in their past life that they had accomplished or were proud of. The most hilarious to respond, said her name was Liz Taylor and her greatest accomplishment was having five husbands. The next six members, most of whom were carrying brown bags, came to the front and each took turns, "Showing and Telling". We were shown kissing dolls, a cherished antique cup and saucer, a collector's item glass stop fruit jar, a nursing bottle and baby doll, a view master and stuffed and skeletons of sea monsters. The "Telling" was quite entertaining, especially the lost vertebra of the whale that swallowed Jonah.

One chaplain, Mrs. George Miller, brought an interesting and consoling discussion on Job after reading a passage from the Book of Job.

Two new members were added to our roll, Mrs. Dewey Angel and Mrs. Lillian Gibson.

NEW 3.5 MILLION RESEARCH CENTER ON I-40 DEDICATED

Governor Dan Moore Friday described textiles as one of America's most modern industries and said that North Carolina will continue as the world's leader in the textile industry.

Speaking at the dedication of Burlington Industries' new 3.5 million Research Center on Interstate 40 near the Guilford College exit, the Governor made reference to textile imports and noted that he has consulted with government leaders on the problem and is "optimistic that corrective steps can and will be taken by the responsible Federal agencies to relieve the burden of unfair foreign competition."

"I have written the President and have traveled to Washington to meet with the Vice President to ask him for help," Governor Moore stated. I have talked with members of the North Carolina Congressional delegation and governors of other major textile producing states. They have joined with me in trying to rectify this situation."

He cited the textile industry's North Carolina payroll ($1 billion) and expansion ($218 million) last year and described the new Burlington facility as "a beacon of research aimed at a brighter, more abundant future for Burlington and the entire textile industry."

The Center is located on Interstate 40 near the Guilford College exit and less than 15 minutes from Kernersville. Its laboratories complement and coordinate research efforts of Burlington operating divisions within specialized areas.

Terming Burlington a company "woven tightly into the economic fabric of this state," Governor Moore noted that during 1966 the Company built six of its seven new manufacturing facilities in North Carolina.

"Burlington Industries had its beginning in North Carolina just 43 years ago," he said. "Although it is today recognized world-wide for its leadership in the industry, it has remained primarily a North Carolina company. It has 120 plants in 15 states and operates in eight foreign countries. Seventy-four of these plants are located in North Carolina and more than half of its 69,000 employees are located in this state."

EXEMPLIFIES CONFIDENCE
This Company's new Research Center houses a 170-member research and development staff. Gov. Moore said the structure, "represents an investment in a better way of life for all and exemplifies Burlington's confidence in the future."

Charles F. Myers, Jr., president of the diversified textile concern, said several years of planning have gone into the construction of the new facility which is "designed for exploring new avenues into the future of the textile industry."

"Some of the more unusual textile products made possible or better by research," Mr. Myers said, "include materials for bullet-proof vests, heat resistant fabrics to cover space vehicle nose cones, glass fabrics for decorative and industrial use, fabrics given unusual properties by radiation, and a wide range of improved textiles for the home, apparel and industry."

"The growth of a new family of permanent press fabrics, and now with soil-release characteristics," Mr. Myers noted, "has given the American consumer ease-of-care textile products far superior to anything known before."

Mr. Myers said his Company's research effort is also investigating new and better ways to control industrial wastes, development of elastomers and polymers for application in textile and furniture products, and high speed photography to analyze textile machinery operation.

"North Carolina is uniquely endowed with qualities which nurture such growth as represented by this Research Center," he said. "Among these is quality of state government. Governor Moore's administration has demonstrated a genuine concern for and has taken many positive steps in promoting healthy industrial development."

"The Tar Heel state, with a rich heritage of textile progress," Mr. Myers said, "has an almost unlimited future for continued growth and prosperity for all its people."
