Davie Officials Plan Recreation Project

Preliminary plans are being made by Davie County officials to develop a major recreational project. The County Planning Board met at 3 p.m. Monday to select one of two sites under consideration.

The project was outlined recently at the regular meeting of the Northwest Economic Development Commission at the Government Center in Winston-Salem. The commission is the body that deals with applications for federal aid to Appalachia funds.

Indications are that Davie County will seek federal funds for the project both through the Appalachia program and through the Land and Water Conservation program.

The planning board visited two sites Monday. One is near the Clarksville community in northwest Davie County. The other is east of U. S. 64 near the Fork community. Both sites are on Dutchman's Creek.

Both sites are at locations where flood control dams are planned as part of the Dutchman's Creek Watershed project. The dams would create lakes suitable for fishing, water skiing, swimming and boating.

One site is in the northwestern part of the county where Liberty Church Road crosses Dutchman's Creek. The site would involve about 500 acres and a lake already planned for 142 acres. However, conservationists say the normal pool can be increased to 213 acres if needed for recreation.

The site would require relocation of a road, or building a bridge, plus purchasing property from about 100 landowners.

The other site about three miles east of Mocksville is just north of U. S. 64. It would be a 250-acre project with a 100-acre lake. Much of the land is thought to be available from the heirs of the late T. Holt Haywood.

This site has the advantages of being easier to reach and being located closer to the population center at Mocksville.

The northwestern site has an advantage of providing a larger park and larger reservoir. It also might provide better camping areas.

The board plans to meet with the Clarksville Ruritan Club before announcing a decision. Members of the planning board include Rufus Brock, Elbert Smith, S. C. Robertson, Richard Beck, Ward Setzer and Wade Dyson.

Another Davie County project discussed at the commission meeting was the possible development of Rick Park, a recreational area in Mocksville. The land has been used as a park for several years and now includes a baseball park.

However, county officials are considering improving the 37-acre park with the aid of Appalachia and Land and Water Conservation funds.

The commissioners also discussed an application by school officials for $328,000 in Appalachia funds for vocational education facilities for North Surry High School at Toast. But this figure will likely be amended by state Appalachia fund coordinators in Raleigh, Matthews said.
