Social Security Is For Everybody

If you're in that half of the U. S. population that's under 30 you may think social security is something remote and unimportant to you right now. Not so, according to Robert Thomas, manager of the Salisbury Social Security office.

In this generally healthy and youthful group, more than 307 people in Davie County receive benefits because they are disabled or are dependent upon disabled workers. About 326 widowed mothers and young children in this county get monthly social security checks as survivors of workers, and 227 students age 18 to 22 and people who became disabled in childhood get monthly benefits as the children of retired, deceased, or disabled workers. Disabled children get social security benefits as long as they are not able to work.

Who are they?

They may be people like Brian O'Donnell, a college athlete who was paralyzed from the waist down by a football injury. He had worked enough during summer vacations to add up to 1½ years — enough work to insure anyone under 24 for disability benefits. He is now eligible for benefits of more than $100 a month.

They may be like the two teenage daughters of a local man who died while insured under social security. Although their widowed mother will continue to work, the two girls will receive benefits on their father's record up to age 18, if they do not marry. If they remain unmarried and continue in school, as they plan to, they will be eligible until they are 22. The money in cases like these is important, of course, Thomas went on, but for the young worker who knows that his family will be at least partially provided for should he be injured or die prematurely, there
