WHEN LOVE IS BLIND

Marriage is either an earthly heaven—or it isn't.

Love is never satisfied until it gets both arms full.

Pity may be akin to love, but it's only a poor relation.

A man in love acts as if he had corns on his intellect.

It takes a lot of cold cash to make an impression on a marble heart.

Actions speak louder than words. True love holds hands in silence.

Some marriages are arranged in the drawing room and dishranged in the court room.

A ninety-eight-pound lump of feminine loveliness can make a 200-pound man feel like a grain of sand in a nickel's worth of sugar.

PERSONS TO BE PITIED

The swine who is putting on his full dress to take her to the show and finds that all his collars are in the laundry.

They who have to ask the dean for traveling time.

The man whose right arm is broken and who has a rash on his right side.

A Jewish auctioneer with writer's cramp.

The guest who is asked to recite "Down by the Rio Grande."

The other guests who have to listen.

The girl who says, "Oh, I'm just crazy about him."—Dartmouth Jack-o-Lantern.

BICKERINGS OF A BACHELOR

A confidence man seldom puts confidence in a woman.

A grass widow is not as green as her title would indicate.

The one ambition of every unmarried woman is to make a name for herself.

"He was the hero of two wars," read the inscription on a tombstone. The poor man had been married twice.
