THE WAR UPON WAR.

An international commission of teachers to revise history books and "take the glamor" out of war is proposed by Professor Amada L. de Becerra, of Mexico.

The idea is not bad. Along with the effort to take the profit out of war, there might be something accomplished in the establishment of a "peace consciousness."

The war spirit spreads not only through the histories of the world but also through the cultivation and development of the glory of warfare by many veterans who participate in the fighting. It helps establish them as heroes and, very often, exerts an influence upon the amount of pension money being paid.

HIGH PAY BUT LITTLE SAVED.

Some weeks ago we read an article by an actor in Hollywood who explained that his $2,000 a week salary went largely to the peculiar expenses connected with keeping up a front at the movie capital and that therefore he had decided that the stress and strain was too much for the balance left in his bank account. This comes to mind when we read a dispatch from Los Angeles, saying that Jean Harlow, whose earnings were $4,000 a week when she died, left an estate valued at only $41,000 with some claims outstanding against this total.

Apparently, as many a man in minor place has discovered, there is a wide difference between the gross and the net income, even in the wonderland of the moving pictures.

SUCKER LIST.

Every year American citizens lose millions of dollars by purchasing fraudulent and worthless stock. Schemers make a business of fleecing those who are always trying to get rich quick and believing the optimistic prospectus written about any fake enterprise.

The best way to eliminate the fraudulent promoter is by educating the public so that he will be unable to find dunces foolish enough to send him their hard-earned savings in return for a promise of excessive profits.

Sad experience does not keep a lot of these suckers from biting the second time. This is shown by the fact that there are people who sell what they call "sucker lists", in which the name of good prospects are made available for any crook wanting to dispose of some worthless securities. Sometimes the deception is cruel, as where an effort is made to attract those suffering from disease to purchase some worthless remedy.

A very safe rule for the average citizen to follow is not to purchase except through reputable brokers or firms. If an unknown character offers you some scheme for getting rich by a comparatively small outlay of cash, you have only to think for a minute to realize that if his proposition was honest he could secure all the cash needed very readily. Don't be a sucker and throw good money away.

MELLON GIVES AWAY FORTUNE.

The death of Andrew W. Mellon removes one of the great industrialists of the nation, one of the "rugged individualists" of an earlier era who played the game according to the prevailing code with great profit to himself.

The great fortune that he left will go largely to charity, according to his family, which has been provided for through earlier gifts. Estimated to be more than $200,000,000 some years ago, the hoard has been reduced by extensive gifts to charity as well as by distribution to his two children.

His attorney says that in the last few years of his life the Pennsylvanian gave away more than $70,000,000, which includes the valuable art collection presented to the nation, together with a $15,000,000 building and a $5,000,000 endowment. Significantly, he it noted, the banker stipulated that the great gallery should not bear his name.

For eleven years Mr. Mellon served as Secretary of the Treasury under three Republican Presidents. During his term of office the national debt was reduced by about $3,000,000,000 dollars and then increased in the last year as depression financing created a deficit.

The monument that he leaves, however, is not public service but generous giving. The national art gallery will cause him to be remembered long after the public debt and political development of this era are forgotten.

goda through the diplomatic functions in behalf of world peace.

Recently, in the face of various threatening situations, he addressed an inquiry to the nations of the world, asking each to give its views in regards to a 388-word statement embodying a code of international conduct. Foreign officials literally fell over themselves to express agreement "in principal" with the Hull formula, which he terms the "alternative, adequate and complete" to war. Such widespread concert of declarations encourages some diplomats in the belief that the basis has been laid for a foundation upon which the world will be able to build a structure of peace.

The Hull statement of principles included: maintenance of peace; national and international self-restraint; abstinence from the use of force in pursuit of policy; abstinence of interference in the internal affairs of other nations; adjustment of international problems by peaceful negotiation; the faithful observance of international agreements; modification of treaty provisions, when need arises, by orderly process; respect by all nations for the rights of others; strengthening international law; promotion of economic security and stability throughout the world; lowering and removing excessive barriers to international trade; equality of commercial opportunity and equality of treatment; limitation and reduction of armaments and co-operative effort through peaceful means in supporting these principles.

The statement recognized the traditional American policy of avoiding entangling alliances but recognized that armed hostilities anywhere seriously affect the rights and interests of all nations. Avowing relief in the reduction of armaments, Mr. Hull emphasized the intention of this country to increase as well as reduce its armed forces "in proportion" to other countries.

Applying this policy to the Far East, the United States recently appealed to China and Japan to abide by treaty pledges and to refrain from a general war. He reminded them that fifty nations had formally approved his statement of principles, outlined above, including China and Japan. The latter attempted to make a reservation in regards to the Far East but the Secretary of State countered with the observation that this country considered them "applicable throughout the world, in the Pacific area as elsewhere."

In other words, the Secretary of State is trying to steer a course midway between extreme isolation and entangling alliances while being as cooperative as possible in the peaceful adjustment of the Sino-Japanese dispute. Without any present idea of the use of force the Government is keeping in consultation with other nations to discover, if possible, means to bring about a pacific settlement in the Far East. The statement is also taken to give notice that the United States has not altered its position in regards to the independence and integrity of China which Japan is also under obligation to respect.

In thus leaving to a future date the final determination of the issues made by the Japanese action in China the Government is probably wise. To do otherwise would almost certainly involve us in war with Japan. The European situation is so complicated that Great Britain feels unable to press Far Eastern rights although the recent shooting of her ambassador to China by Japanese airmen caused strong anti-Japanese sentiment in London. However, neither the United States nor Great Britain feels inclined to challenge Japan now and only the future will disclose whether either of them will call for Japanese observance of treaties in regards to China.

News that China and Russia have signed a non-aggression treaty was taken in Tokyo to mean that the Soviet Government will take a hand in the Far Eastern situation. If this develops Japan and some European observers expect Germany to move against Russia, with the danger that France will become involved through her treaty with the Russians. If this comes about the world war that everybody has been predicting for some years will be at hand. Just as Great Britain has been using every influence to localize the fighting in Spain the leading nations of the world will undoubtedly try to prevent the battles in the Far East from spreading.

Meanwhile, the democratic nations of the earth recognize the peril that dictators present and unless something favorable develops there is the possibility that public opinion in all peace-loving countries will demand some action to make treaty-breaking and warfare unprofitable even if it takes a war to do it.
