WOMEN OF FARM BUREAU HOLD CONVENTION MEETS

The Associated Women of the North Carolina Farm Bureau held their initial meeting of the 10th Annual Convention at the Robert E. Lee Hotel, Winston-Salem, Wednesday evening, with Mrs. B. B. Everett, president, presiding. This organization had its beginning four years ago and has grown steadily since that time. Its purpose is to enlist the creative interest of women, to help accent the fundamental importance of organized efforts, and to bring about better educational and spiritual opportunities for rural people.

Miss Ruth Gilpen, president Altrusa Club, Winston-Salem, welcomed the group. Mrs. Mayon Parker, of Ahsokie, responded. Mrs. Herman Baker, of Farmville, introduced Mrs. Charles W. Seawell, of Chicago, Ill., Adm. Director, Associated Women of the American Farm Bureau Federation, who made a timely address.

Miss Sally Hill, who edits a page for the Progressive Farmer, made a talk and urged the women to take time to send personal helpful hints for her page. Special music was enjoyed.

After adjournment, the women held a social hour, when delicious punch with Moravian cookies were served.

The Association reconvened Thursday morning at 9:30 o'clock, with Miss Ethel Parker, of Gatesville, presiding. Miss Verona Lee Joyner, of Farmville, led the Pledge of Allegiance, after which Mrs. B. B. Everett gave her annual address and Miss Marjorie Beal, of the North Carolina Library Commission, made brief remarks.

A report from the nominating committee, composed of Mrs. Herman Baker, chairman, Mrs. D. D. Fields and Miss Emma Bryan, resulted in the election of the following officers by acclamation: Mrs. B. B. Everett, president; Mrs. J. I. Wagner, vice president; Mrs. Mayon Parker, secretary.

Thus was brought to a close a most successful and inspirational meeting.

The world's 1945-46 rice harvest is listed at 6,200,000,000 bushels, a decline of about 10 percent when compared with the output of the previous year.

IT'S THE NATCHEL THING TO DO

There's most always a right and a wrong way to do a thing. I tries out the natchel way first and usually it turns out to be the best way. Take Chilean Nitrate for example. One reason why it pays so good is because it's a natchel product itself. Comes right out of the ground. And it's a friendly sort of thing to put on the land because it makes the land sweeter every time. It's just the natchel thing to use!

Industrialization of the South

Part I: Prewar Development

Recent war production accelerated Southern industrial expansion which had been proceeding at a faster pace than in the rest of the United States so that today the South, capitalizing upon its vast natural resources, is making rapid progress toward a better balanced economy that will benefit both the region and the Nation.

At the same time, the region expanded its furniture factories, food processing plants and other units of its existing industry...

Throughout the South in recent years new industries have been emerging and older ones expanding. New rayon mills, chemical manufacturing establishments, pulp and paper plants, foundries, garment factories, rubber manufacturing plants and many similar establishments have sprung up in the South as the result of its natural advantages.

Thus, even during the depression of the 1930's the industrial growth of the South proceeded vigorously and its dependence upon agriculture as an all-important source of income lessened. When production for national defense became the country's single goal, the South's industrial position, percentage-wise, was still below that of the country as a whole but its industrial plant was expanding faster than that of the rest of the Nation and its industry was growing more and more diversified.

Part II: Wartime Expansion

Perhaps nowhere else in the United States did war change the industrial map so much as in the South. In many parts of the region, the industrial development of a generation was telescoped into a few years.

Southern manufacturing facilities were expanded by the expenditure during the period from July, 1940, through May, 1944, of $4,775 million, of which more than $1 billion were spent by private enterprise.

production, and the outlook for new factories and the expansion of existing facilities seems bright. Plans have already been reported, for example, for a $6 million pulp mill, a $2 million paint manufacturing plant, a $1.5 million power plant and many smaller establishments.

On the whole, the continued industrial development of the South seems naturally and logically indicated. Its wealth of resources, its favorable climate, its ample power supply, and its other advantages may well make this region the new industrial frontier of the United States.

Many of the smaller Southern war plants are already being converted to peacetime
