County Benefitted By Blood Bank

No Red Cross activity in recent years has been of more direct benefit to this community than the regional blood bank, and no project is likely to be of greater assistance unless a major disaster strikes and the Red Cross moves in with its supplies and personnel to alleviate suffering and distress.

Blood from the bank, whose headquarters are in Norfolk, have been made available to at least seven Farmville residents, without cost other than the fee approved by hospitals and Red Cross for necessary laboratory tests. (The fee in Pitt county is $10.) Citizens receiving this blood were patients in six different hospitals located in five cities. One of the recipients, James Wooten, Jr., donated blood to the bank when the bloodmobile visited Farmville two months ago. As with the other patients, the transfusions aided recovery and made considerably lighter his hospital bill.

Blood from the bank has been directly responsible for saving the life of the daughter of an ECC official, according to County Red Cross officers.

The blood was administered while the daughter was critically ill in Pitt Memorial Hospital and came directly from blood donated by citizens of the county.

One-half of the blood contributed through the bloodmobile goes to the armed services. The remainder is kept within the area. Hospitals use their own stocks of blood and then replenish their supply by drawing from the bank in Norfolk. If advance notice is given, doctors can arrange for blood to be sent in advance to hospitals for the patient's use when, and if, needed.

Robert D. Rouse, Jr., Robert Wheeler and Jack Tyson served on the committee that was largely responsible for the success of the bloodmobile's visit to Farmville. It is scheduled for Farmville again within a few months.

Crime Situation Summarized For Legion By Agent

W. H. Gibson of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, whose headquarters are in Kinston, last Friday night gave members of the Farmville American Legion a shocking summary of crime conditions in the United States and asserted that improvements will come only after homes, churches and schools have instilled in citizens, young and old, a proper respect for Christian teachings.

Introduced by Curtis Flanagan, with whom he was in school at Wake Forest, Mr. Gibson stated that the FBI was established for the two-fold purpose of conducting internal security investigations and investigating criminal activity. He explained that since 1939 the bulk of the agency's attention has been given to investigating and bringing to trial persons involved in sabotage and espionage. These activities became of paramount importance when World War II loomed and have continued to be so. Several cases of nation-wide importance were discussed and explained but Mr. Gibson refused to elaborate on Communist activity or on the recent Klu Klux Klan uprising in Columbus county.

While the work of the FBI is concerned primarily with investigations of criminal activity and breaches of national security, agents are often called upon to investigate other laws and are given information which, in turn, is given to postal authorities or agents of the Treasury department. He explained that T-men who come under the Treasury department are vested with authority to investigate tax frauds. The FBI is under the Department of Justice.

For crime detection and prevention, Americans are being tabbed at the rate of $18 billions a year. This tremendous sum is more than three and a half times as much as the $5 1/2 billion the nation spends annually on its schools. The contributions to churches is much less.

Mr. Gibson stated that today more girls are serving as bar-maids in this country than are enrolled in colleges. He also declared that the total of all students enrolled in American colleges is less than the number of inmates of penal institutions.

The youthfulness of the law-breakers is also a matter of grave concern to those charged with ferreting out criminals and erasing conditions which develop a disregard for laws of God and man. The FBI-man said that during the five-year period from 1941 to 1946, more crimes were committed by the 17-year bracket than any other group. By 1950, more crimes were committed by young men and women 21 years old, than in any other group. This represented an improvement, but the conditions remains alarming.

To curb criminal tendencies an lawlessness, the agent asserted that greater respect for Christ's laws must be taught. An inevitable result of such teaching, he declared, will be a deeper and more profound respect for man's laws.

Robert D. Rouse, Jr., commander of the post, presided over the meeting. Members of the auxiliary were complimented on the delicious and supper they served. Mute testimony to their culinary ability was the pile of bones remaining on the plates of Legionnaires Glenn Newton, Charles Edwards and Alfred Lewis.

Several items of business were transacted during the evening. A nominating committee was requested to have its report ready by the May meeting. The post voted to rent a portion of the building to Dr. E. H. Oakley, provided Dr. Oakley's plans did not interfere with any activities of the auxiliary. A committee to investigate the feasibility of the post sponsoring a team in the Little League was appointed. Another group was asked to investigate the conditions of the Home and to find out what improvements and repairs should be made.

The post empowered the executive committee to confer with George Moore on granting his request for moving a garage on the Legion lot.
