

Making the American Dollar Do Double Duty in Armenia

Top—Making the Orphanage Furture. Right—Earning His Bread and Learning a Trade. Left—Spinning the Cloth for Her Own Clothes.

GETTING the dollar to do double duty when it is hard enough to persuade it to give one hundred cents worth of work may sound like a dream. But it is the actual accomplishment of American workers of the Near East Relief in the Levant, where living costs are constantly rising for new altitude records.

carpentering, tailoring, dressmaking and a dozen other trades. The same plan is said by these workers to have been followed with considerable success in the administering of general relief. Because it was found that the indiscriminate distributions of money and food tended to make permanent beggars of those that received this form of relief, industrial shops have opened where employment is given to those in need. The products of these shops are either sold or used in caring for the orphans and adult refugees.

"Who are these girls?"
"Members of our Pen and Pencil club."
"Some of them are very strong with the eyebrow pencil."

Her Speaking Terms.

Kris—Talk is cheap.
Kross—I don't know about that; my wife talked me out of $20 last night.

THE CRITIC'S COMMENT
Old Spooner is married again, I see; The fourth time he has wed; He has a soft spot in his heart—
Perhaps it's in his head.

It Requires "Bone" Though.
In times gone by the women wore
A gown called Mother Hubbard.
Today the style resembles more
That dear old lady's cupboard.

Careful Man.
Griggs—Is Hillson a careful driver?
Kris—Very much so. He always toots his horn before crossing a railroad track.

Hard to Recognize.
"Maude declares that she hates hat-tery."
"Maybe. The trouble is that most of the time she doesn't recognize it."

Trapping Season Promises Well

KINSTON, Nov. 28.—The trappers of Eastern Carolina will informally inaugurate their season during the next few days. It promises to be a good season, all indications pointing to an increase in fur-bearing animals in the tidewater section and adjoining tringe of counties during the past breeding season. The business as a total is an important one, the proceeds running into many thousands of dollars annually. Trapping is a side line for hundreds of Eastern Carolinians, and dealers in furs are located at many points. The hides as a usual thing are shipped to furriers in the North.

Most of the fur-bearers found in North Carolina are native to the tidewater section of the State. Otters, mink, muskrats and numerous other species are trapped for their hides. Skins of upland animals are also valuable, and the pelts of the opossum and the raccoon are more eagerly sought than their meat. Furs so far this season have not been of exceptional quality. The weather has been unseasonably warm and the coats of the animals have not assumed their winter time lustre and weight.

Kinston has become a fairly important market in recent years. Large numbers of pelts are brought here from a number of counties, and both dealers and trappers have shared in a profitable business. Dogs are used in the catching of many fur-bearing animals, and scurvey county chains are being used to a profit. The best specimens have attained remarkable values as a result of their proficiency in this line.

Holly and Mistletoe Going North Already

KINSTON, Nov. 28.—The North Carolina woods will lend their brightness to the Christmas holidays in a thousand clipped and trimmed in the North at the approaching Yuletide. Reports indicate that the market for the evergreens of the eastern section of the State will be good. The demand is never lacking. In most localities there is as much holly and mistletoe as ever. The "Christmas plants" thrive in this territory. The holly is at its brightest from berries and greenness of foliage a few weeks before the holidays, when it is gathered by wagon-loads for shipment to New York and elsewhere in the North. Branches and sprigs are taken from the trees; the thorny holly doesn't make a successful Christmas tree, usually and the whole tree is seldom taken. Young spruces are more desirable and fairly plentiful in many parts of the North.

Statistics are not available, but it is known that many carloads of holly and mistletoe have been shipped from the country below here the past few years. Carefully packed in barrels and crates, the evergreens retain their freshness for weeks. In the retail centers at New York and elsewhere small sprigs, to be had for the taking in nearly every roadside cove in this section, bring high prices.

Mistletoe, when it comes to get more valuable than holly, is plentiful this year. On trees growing about the shores of a pond a few miles from here this plant is growing in profusion. It is estimated that there is a small fortune in the tops of the gnarled cypresses and such.
